CHRIST AND SATAN

This is an authorized facsimile of the original book, and was produced in 1972 by microfilm-xerography by University Microfilms, A Xerox Company, Ann Arbor, Michigan, U.S.A.

CHRIST AND SATAN

AN OLD ENGLISH POEM

EDITED WITH INTRODUCTION, NOTES, AND GLOSSARY

BY

MERREL DARE CLUBB

Assistant Professor of English in Miami University

A Dissertation presented to the Faculty of the Graduate School of Yale University in Candidacy for the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy

964033-116

PATRI · MEO

QUI

NON · SOLUM · JUVENTUTEM · MEAM

SUSTENTAVIT · INSTITUITQUE

SED · ETIAM · MENTEM · ET · COR

OPTIMO · EXEMPLO · CONCITAVIT

HAS · PRIMITIAS · LABORIS

D. D. D.

PREFACE

The poem whi.' is the subject of this edition has not heretofore been completely and separately edited. This fact has disposed the editor to adopt a policy of which some, who believe that editorial matter should be restricted to the very minimum, may be inclined to disapprove. But since the textual and literary problems presented by Christ and Satan have elicited widely different views, the editor did not think it advisable merely to offer a new set of opinions, without making specific reference to those of previous scholars.

No pains have been spared to render accurate the text of the poem. It has been collated three times with a rotograph of the manuscript, and a final collation has been made since the text was in page-proof. Anything approaching a diplomatic reprint of a poetical text so obviously imperfect was, of course, out of the question; but I have refrained as much as possible from altering the reading of a manuscript which, as the variants show, has been rather excessively emended.

I wish to express my sincere gratitude to Professor Albert Stanburrough Cook for his kindly interest throughout the progress of my work upon this edition, as well as for much valuable counsel and aid in the printing. My thanks are also due in large measure to Professor Robert J. Menner, under whose guidance the actual writing was done. I am obliged to Mr. Rudolph Willard for permission to use his transcripts of the homilies of the Vercelli Book. To my wife I am grateful for generous assistance in preparing the original copy, and in reading the proof.

A considerable portion of the expense of printing has been borne by Yale University and by Miami University.

Oxford, Ohio,
  May, 1925.

CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION

MANUSCRIPT. TITLE

Christ and Satan comprises the latter portion of MS. Junius XI, preserved in the Bodleian Library at Oxford. This is a small parchment folio, containing 229 written pages. It measures 12¼ inches in height, and 7¾ in breadth. The writing covers, on an average, 9⅛ by 5½ inches. The margin at the bottom is twice as deep as that at the top. There are 27 lines to the page, whereas the first part of the book was ruled on the scale of 26 lines. All the pages are completely filled with writing, with the two following exceptions: the lower half of page 229 is vacant, and the same portion of page 225 contains a curious unfinished design. According to Stoddard,[1] the present binding of oak boards covered with vellum dates from about 1450-1475. There is evidence that two folios have been cut out, one between pages 216 and 217, the other between pages 222 and 223. Stoddard thinks that a cut on page 212 indicates the loss of a folio before page 213, and that the folio which formed the other half of the leaf (if such there were) would have come between pages 228 and 229. This third loss has been doubted. At any rate, there is no break in the sense in any of the three cases, so that the missing folios were probably left vacant for future illustration. Afterwards, since parchment was a valuable commodity, some one may have cut them out. The manuscript is comparatively well preserved. There are no illegible passages, and only pages 224 and 225, which face each other, have been blurred to any extent.

---

[1] 'The Cædmon Poems in MS. Junius XI,' Anglia 10. 157-167. Stoddard's article contains the most exhaustive external description of the whole manuscript. See also the 'Account of Cædmon's Metrical Paraphrase of Scripture History, an Illuminated Manuscript of the Tenth Century,' by Henry Ellis, in Archæologia 24. 329-335; and Westwood's Palæographia Sacra Pictoria. The scholars who have discussed the Junius MS. have almost wholly confined their attention to the first part, because, first, it is a much better specimen of calligraphy, and, secondly, it contains the very interesting series of drawings illustrating the Genesis. These may be seen in facsimile in Archæologia, loc. cit., and Kennedy's The Cædmon Poems.

The poem begins at page 213 and ends at page 229. It is preceded in the MS. by three others: the Genesis, Exodus, and Daniel. Of all four, only the Genesis bears a title (and this by a later hand). Because of the change in subject-matter, between the two sections, from the Old Testament to the New, which was accompanied, moreover, by a change in scribes, and as a result of a literal interpretation of the rubric at the end, 'Finit Liber II. Amen,' Christ and Satan was for long described as the 'Second Book of Cædmon.' (Hickes spoke of it as the 'additament.') Grein[2] was the first to apply to it the name accepted for the present edition. Wülker,[3] following the more recent theory as to the unity of the piece, affixed the following titles at lines 1, 366, and 665: 'Die Klagen der Gefallnen Engel,' 'Christi Höllenfahrt, Auferstehung, Himmelfahrt, und Kommen zum Jüngsten Gericht.'

We know nothing of the history of the Junius MS. before the middle of the seventeenth century, when Francis Dujon, known as Junius, published in Amsterdam a fairly exact reprint of it in Old English type.[4] He informs us that James Ussher, Archbishop of Armagh, had given him the manuscript. William Somner also consulted it for his Dictionarium Saxonico-Latino-Anglicum (1659). Upon Junius'

---

[2] Bibliothek der Angelsächsischen Poesie, 1857.

[3] In his revision of Grein's Bibliothek, 1894.

[4] Cædmonis Monachi Paraphrasis Poetica Genesios ac præcipuarum Sacræ paginæ Historiarum, abhinc annos MLXX. Anglo-Saxonicè conscripta, et nunc primùm edita à Francisco Junio F. F. Amstelodami ... Typis et sumptibus Editoris. MDCLV. 4°. 106 + 10 pp.

death in 1677, it came, with the rest of his collections, into the possession of the Bodleian.

Earlier scholars generally assigned the manuscript as a whole to the tenth century. Ellis, Stoddard, the editors[5] of the Palæographical Society's facsimiles (see Series 2, Plates 14, 15), and Blackburn[6] date it about the year 1000, or the early eleventh century. Keller,[7] whose study of the writing of dated documents puts him in a position to give an especially trustworthy verdict, decides for the last decades of the tenth, evidently without distinguishing chronologically the two 'books.' He places it somewhat later than the Exeter Book and the Vercelli Book (i. e., after 970-980 A. D.).[8] This will do very well for Book I, but Keller can not have studied Book II very minutely, since he does not seem aware that more than one scribe shared in it, whereas there are actually three.[9]

In dating a poetical manuscript, one must remember that a scribe working from a literary exemplar is more likely to exhibit archaic features than would the same scribe in writing legal documents. Keller mentions so-called high e's in Book II. In the work of the first scribe, they do occur, but two facts are to be noticed. First, these e's are of an especially archaic and unpleasing variety (ℓ), and look as if made to order; and, in the second place, the scribe soon tired of aping this particular feature. There are roughly 14, 8, and 3 high e's on the first three pages taken in order.[10] On the basis of Keller's own criteria, the more important of which are

[5] E. A. Bond, E. M. Thompson, G. F. Warner.
[6] Exodus and Daniel, Introduction, p. vii.
[7] Angelsächsische Palaeographie (Palaestra, Vol. 43) 1. 39.
[8] See Keller's article entitled 'Angelsächsische Schrift' in Hoops' Reallexikon der Germanischen Altertumskunde.
[9] His notion that there are dotted i's in Book II cannot be substantiated. A few i's look as though supplied with dots, but the dots are really metrical points.
[10] On the imitativeness of the first scribe, see below, p. xix, note 25.

mentioned in the course of the following paragraphs, it is evident that the writing of Book II is later than that of Book I; but probably there was less than a generation between them, so that the manuscript of Book II can be dated about 1000 A. D.[11]

All three scribes[12] avoid the high e (with the exception noted above); they avoid also both the round s and the high s (ʄ), employing the 'insular' s (ꞃ) almost exclusively.
They never use the three-stroke a. The terminations of the short vertical strokes are never pointed, whereas those of the long strokes are often blunt in the writing of scribes B and C, but sometimes extravagantly long and pointed, sometimes blunt, in that of A. A and C make no distinction between d and ð except in the lateral stroke. A uses only the straight-line y (dotted only once, and that by the Cor-rector). B begins by imitating the y with outward bending shanks (ꞃ), but suddenly, at the top of page 225, he drops this for the straight form, which he employs consistently thereafter. He usually dots his y. Both A and B curiously, for about a page (pages 215 and 217), imitate what Keller calls the West Saxon g, the lower stroke of which is continued to form a complete loop.

The first scribe, who copied pages 213-5, to use Keller's characterization, writes a round, very irregular hand. Many of his individual letters are graceful, but the tout ensemble is unpleasing to the eye. His most distinctive letter is a, for which he uses the minuscule a, similar to the modern small Roman. The second scribe wrote the bulk of the poem, stopping with page 228. Toward the end, that is, [11] Thorpe (Metrical Paraphrase of parts of the Holy Scriptures in Anglo-Saxon, p. VII) inferred from the character of the transcription that Christ and Satan was taken down from oral dictation. Groschopp ('Das Angelsächsische Gedicht "Crist und Satan,"' Anglia 6. 266) showed that this theory was impossible.

[12] For convenience, I shall speak of them as A, B, and C in the following discussion.

from the middle of page 227 to the middle of page 228, he seems to have tried to economize both space and time. Most of the lines in this section look very cramped, and abbreviations are much more frequent than usual. B's hand is very easy to read, and much more regular than A's. Some of his pages on the whole are very pleasing in appearance; yet the form of his letters is quite plain, so that his style must be ranked rather lower than that of the scribe of Book I. He is much more careful than A in confining his use of ð to the medial and final positions. The third scribe is responsible for only half a page. He uses a blunter pen, and writes uniformly. His work is a considerable improvement on A's.

I can see very little apparent chronological difference in the writing of these three scribes,[13] none of such importance as is evident between the work of the two scribes of the Beowulf MS.[14]

The first six (except the fourth) of the twelve sections into which the text is divided are numbered with small Roman numerals. In eight cases, a plain large capital marks the beginning. There is one ornamental capital somewhat similar to those of Book I, which were formed by various combinations of a strange sort of monster. On three occasions, the space for the capitals is left vacant. The points

[13] See below, p. xix, note 25, on the way they treat the dialect of their copy.
[14] There is some difference of opinion concerning the quality of the transcription. Dietrich, in his note on line 479 (Zs. f. D. Alt., Vol. 10) and elsewhere, lays to the inexactness of the poet, not to the incompetence of the scribes, the lines which make sense, but are metrically confused. Wülker (see his note on 729) considers that either poet or scribes might be guilty; while Holthausen (Anglia Bb. 5. 234) and Graz (Eng. Stud. 21. 19) argue that the transcription, instead of the poet, is at fault. Except possibly with regard to the last portion of the poem, I believe that these last-mentioned scholars are nearer the truth. It seems probable to me, however, that the corruption of the text took place in an intermediate MS., not in the work of our three scribes.

of division, in eleven instances out of twelve, correspond to rather definite pauses in the progress of the poem. Only the sixth is superfluous, and even this marks a separate paragraph. The twelfth section, however, needs to be broken up into two parts at line 665. The first eleven sections range in length from 31 to 77 lines, or from three-fourths of a page to over one and one-half pages of manuscript. (The twelfth contains 135 lines, and covers two and one-half pages.) This orderly but unequal distribution of material is against Henry Bradley's theory[18] that the numbered sections in Christ and Satan correspond, as he thinks they do in the Genesis and the Exodus, 'to the separate sheets of an earlier MS.' Bradley continues: 'I myself think it very likely that a critical examination of the text might render it probable that the sheets were approximately equal in the number of verses that they contained.' Such a critical examination would have to pursue a truly Procrustean policy of amputating and stretching.

Two or three hypotheses offer possible explanations of the way in which the manuscript of Christ and Satan came to form a part of the Junius codex. First, it could have been written as a continuation of Book I. Thus Stoddard thinks that agreement in size and form between the two sections warrants the belief that the book which was bound in the fifteenth century was a single manuscript, of the same size as in the eleventh century. Blackburn amplifies this view. He is of the opinion 'that the book was originally intended for the first part only, that this was left unfinished, . . . the work of the scribe being . . . interrupted before he had filled the book, and that the pages left unwritten at the end were afterwards utilized by other scribes for writing the second poem.' This is very plausible. But, granted that the two sections were written at the same place, it is not impossible that the size of parchment used, and the width of the upper and lower margins (which are the only features in which Books I and II agree), should be more or less fixed quantities in a given scriptorium; so that similarity in such matters need not imply that two manuscripts belonged originally to the same book, even though they came in course of time to be bound together. Besides, a later scribe who knew Book I, and intended to add our poem to it as Book II, could easily imitate such externalities. There is one additional clue. The rotograph shows on every leaf that the manuscript of Christ and Satan has been folded from top to bottom in the middle after it was written, whereas I have been able to discover indications of such folding in none of the facsimiles of the Genesis. If this should be corroborated by an examination of the manuscript of Book I itself, Black-burn's explanation would have to be given up. It seems clear, however all this may be, that at some later time in the eleventh century the two sections were treated as one book, because there are traces in the Genesis of the hand of the Late West Saxon Corrector who was so active in Christ and Satan.

---

[18] 'The Numbered Sections in Old English Poetical MSS.,' Proceedings of the British Academy, 1915-6, p. 179.

The scribes use little punctuation, properly speaking. A has a few semicolons, and B also on one page. The end of the sections is marked by a simple period, a semicolon, two periods, or a period and a dash. After line 365 stand a colon and a dash. Capitals occur sporadically, and are as likely as not to be used in the wrong place. The mark most consistently and accurately employed is the metrical point, indicating the pause between hemistichs. It is found pretty regularly throughout, except for a space of fifteen lines following line 280, and is rarely misplaced. In many instances it has been added by the Corrector, who also distinguished the cæsural pause by a check, beginning with line 51. He omits this last for two or three long periods, and often places it at the end-pause. Abbreviation is confined chiefly to the Tironian sign ⁊ , for and (the full form is never found), ~ over vowels for m, and ⸲ for þæt. Wæī, þoñ, scǣs, efī are isolated forms for wæter, þonne, sanctas, and æfter.

Blackburn's notes[16] on the use of accent-marks in the Exodus hold equally good for Christ and Satan. These marks are very frequent (190 in the first 250 lines), and seem to come from more than one hand. In by far the majority of instances, the accent chances to have been placed on a long syllable, but this does not prove that it was intended for a sign of length. It is more probable that it indicates syllables which seemed to the writer or reader to be emphatic in metre or sense.

A fourth person, in addition to the three scribes, had a hand in giving the manuscript its final form, namely, a corrector.[17] His chief work consisted in changing the vowels of the text to the normal Late West Saxon form; but he by no means does this in a thorough-going manner, and his activity falls off decidedly after line 125, where the second scribe, who did most of the normalizing himself, begins to write.[18] The Corrector also occasionally has a suggestion to offer in passages of which the meaning is dark. His corrections are usually written in the space between the lines, but alterations of the letters, or even of whole words, of the text are found. Sometimes they take the form of alternative readings, and there are a very few explanatory glosses. He often joins, by means of lines, syllables which belong together, or separates others by large commas. The addi-

---

[16] Op. cit., pp. xiv-xviii.

[17] Sievers (Zs. f. D. Alt. 15. 456) thinks the Corrector's writing apparently contemporary with that of the scribes; Wülker (Bibliothek) considers it somewhat later; Frings (Zs. f. D. Phil. 45. 219-221), for phonological reasons, assigns the Corrector to the time of Ælfric. He is probably not far removed from the time of the MS. There are a few corrections which seem to be in a hand different from that of the regular corrector.

[18] For an account of the phonology and inflection of the Corrector's modifications of MS. readings, see Frings' article in Zs. f. D. Phil. 45. 220-1.

tions which the Corrector made cause no trouble; but he also made a number of erasures, which either obscure the phonology of the text or deprive us of the original reading, at the same time offering a substitute which is of questionable value. There is no indication whatever that he worked from any other copy, even from the probably faulty one which the scribes had used. His few attempts at elucidation or restoration, some of which are acceptable, are quite obvious, and most of his changes are unnecessary. Cosijn,[19] indeed, describes him as worthless. Frings,[20] however, inclines to regard most of his emendations affecting the sense or syntax of the poem as real improvements. They often are, when judged by the standards of rigorous normality, but there is no reason to suppose that they restore the original readings. Frings lists the following lines as containing changes which are not 'superfluous': 29, 89, 95, 97, 107, 120, 214, 217, 236, 331, 389, 437, 476, 588, 682, 687, 693, 711. It has seemed to me that only those in 95, 120, 236, 389, 437, and 682 are of any value in establishing the text, although some of the others are not exactly superfluous.

LANGUAGE

Groschopp's investigation of the language of Christ and Satan was the first which was extensive enough to be at all significant.[21] The value of his conclusions, however, is

---

[19] Beitr. sur Gesch. der D. Spr. und Lit. 21. 23.

[20] Op. cit., pp. 219-220.

[21] Hickes described the dialect of the 'Cædmonian' poems as Dano-Saxon, by which he meant the language of Northumbria after the Danes had corrupted it. See his Thesaurus Linguarum Vett. Septentrionalium (1703), p. 133; also his letter to Bishop Nicolson (quoted by Thorpe, pp. IX, X), and Wanley's Catalogus, p. 77. Thorpe took issue with Hickes; he believed the poems to be in 'pure Saxon,' except for some orthographic peculiarities in the second book (Cædmon's Metrical Paraphrase of parts of the Holy Scriptures in diminished by the fact that he was apparently not aware of the existence of a Mercian dialect, alongside of West Saxon, Kentish, and Northumbrian. Since the distinctive features of the last of these three are absent, he explained the variations from standard West Saxon, many of which he admitted were to be found also in Northumbrian, as chargeable to Kentish scribes. He believed the original version to have been West Saxon, which original version was derived in turn from a long Northumbrian poem.[21] In the same year (1883), Kühn said it seemed certain to him that the extant text, with its mixed dialect, had been recast from a Mercian original.[22]

Kühn's opinion on the dialect, with slight modification, was substantiated in Frings' admirable and exhaustive study.[24] On the basis of the grammars of Bülbring and Sievers, Frings showed conclusively that the language of Christ and Satan was originally a Mercian-Northumbrian border dialect.

Anglo-Saxon (1832), p. IX). Bouterwek listed a number of peculiarities in the language of Christ and Satan, which he said remind one of Northumbrian; but he admitted that indubitable characteristics of that dialect can be only rarely pointed out (Cædmon's des Angelsachsen Biblische Dichtungen (1848-54), p. CCXXXIV).

[21] Das Angelsächsische Gedicht 'Crist und Satan' (reprinted in Anglia 6. 248-276). In 1885 Sievers supported Groschopp's Kentish hypothesis. Accepting iû in 107, Sievers scanned the line with primary accents on iû (instead of ähte) and ealles, and concluded that we have here an instance of an alliteration possible only in Kentish, i (g): ea. He also singled out styde, 197, as a Kentish form. Sievers' general theory of the poems in Junius XI is as follows: 'Ich glaube, die ganze sammlung ist in Kent oder dessen nachbarschaft zusammengebracht worden, für einzelne der gedichte auch direkt kentischer ursprung nachzuweisen' (see Beitr. zur Gesch. d. Spr. und Lit. 10. 195-9).

[22] Uber die Angelsächsischen Gedichte von Christ und Satan, pp. 38-42. Brandl characterized the poem as of Anglian origin in his Geschichte der Altenglischen Literatur, in Paul's Grundriss der Germanischen Philologie (1908) 2. 1045.

[24] 'Christ und Satan,' Zs. f. D. Phil. 45. 216-237.

that is, that it occupied an intermediate position between the Rushworth Gloss to Matthew and the Vespasian Psalter on the one hand, and the Rushworth Gloss to Mark, Luke, and John, the Lindisfarne Gospels, and the Durham Ritual on the other.   He neatly disposes of Sievers' two isolated Kenticisms, and explodes Groschopp's notion that the original was in the West Saxon dialect, and that the non-West Saxon forms were to be assigned to the scribes, by a single observation: there are in the text quite a considerable number of West Saxon and especially Late West Saxon characteristics, several of which are certainly later than many of the non-West Saxon peculiarities.   Hence it is the West Saxon rather than the non-West Saxon forms which must have derived from the scribes—just the reverse of Groschopp's view.   Frings believes that the scribes had the Anglian original before them, and there is surely no ground for any other conclusion.[26]   Having shown that the original dialect cannot have been Kentish, Frings also excludes the assumption of an intermediate Kentish version.   The only apparently certain Kentish form in Christ and Satan is seondon, found in 104 and 709 (see Sievers-Cook, Grammar of Old

---

[26] This does not exclude the possibility of intermediate Anglian transcriptions, however.

Frings' summary of the different policies which the three scribes pursue in their treatment of the text may well be given in his own words: 'Der erste schreiber bemühte sich vergebens, den ihm vorliegenden anglischen originaltext in ein glattes spätws. umzu-schreiben; er brach daher ab [mit v. 125]; dem zweiten schreiber gelang die umschrift wesentlich besser; und erst der dritte hielt sich wieder treuer an die vorlage [in v. 711-733]. Der spätws. korrektor sah sich daher namentlich in v. 1-125 zu verhältnismässig zahlreichen änderungen gezwungen.' In regard to this characterization, the only doubt which arises is whether it is necessary to assign failure to achieve a smooth Late West Saxon rendering as the cause of the first scribe's breaking off at line 125. His work is so imitative, that is, in an easy-going way, that one must doubt whether he had any well-defined purpose of consistently Saxonizing his text at all.

English, 427, n. 2, 3).[26] In 709 it is an emendation for seond, offered by the Corrector. Whether Frings is right in considering dissyllabic seondon in 104 open to suspicion because burdensome to the line, or not, in any case it would be rash to affirm the existence of a Kentish intermediary on the basis of one doubtful form, which, for convenience' sake, we may lay to the first scribe.

The second scribe by his normalizing, and the Corrector by his erasures, have considerably obscured the original dialect (i. e., a rather distinct type of Anglian); but because of the first scribe's imitativeness, and the fact that the poem does not seem to have gone through many stages of transmission, that dialect is represented about as consistently, and in proportionally as great an abundance of forms, as is the original speech of any other Old English poem of equal length which has come down to us in a West Saxon version.[27]

The phonological peculiarities which constitute the chief body of evidence regarding the dialect of Christ and Satan are presented below in résumé for convenience of reference.[28]

---

[26] See also Heidemann, 'Die Flexion des Verb. Subst. im Angelsächsischen,' Archiv 147. 33 ff.

[27] The age of the dialect, and the evidence it presents in regard to the unity and date of the poem, will be reserved for treatment under those general topics.

[28] This sketch is based upon the comprehensive study made by Frings. It makes no pretensions to completeness or originality, though the editor has ventured to disagree with a very few of Frings' conclusions. He has also slightly changed the arrangement, presenting the normal WS. phenomena before those of the other dialects. Although the references to lines in which a given phenomenon is to be found are usually by no means complete, references have been given, wherever possible, to at least one line in each of the three parts, in order to emphasize the linguistic unity of the original version.
The developments noted begin, for the most part, with the West Germanic, not the Old English sounds. The sign > is used for 'becomes,' 'appears as.' Unless otherwise specified, a given phenomenon is characteristic of WS., or at least is to be found in that dialect, and hence is of no value in determining the original dialect of the poem.

Vowels of Stressed Syllables

WG. ă in a closed syllable when not influenced by the sounds of adjacent syllables usually becomes æ. A few cases of Mercian e are found (e. g., gefestnade, 3; scref, 26; hrefnan, 500; gefregn, 526).

ă before nasals > both a (gelamp, 24; land, 213; gelamp, 478; sang, 663; mancynnes, 668; handum, 706) and o (song, 45; moncynnes, 64; lond, 215; hondum, 540; stondaðˑ, 620; hondum, 680A; gong, 708).

ă before l + cons. > ea (wealdend, 125; ealdor, 373; ealle. 385; gewealde, 687) and a (Anglian, etc.) in ymbhalaeðˑ, 7; waldendes, 396; alne, 702.

ă before r + cons. > ea (bearn, 10; þearle, 421; wearðˑ, 711) and Anglian a (forwarðˑ, 21; swarte, 640; swarta, 704).

ă before h > ea (leahtrum, 263; geseah, 7ι6) and e (esle, 681).

i-umlaut of ă + l + cons. = Anglian æ in wælm, 30; e (Saxon patois and Kentish) in welme, 39; and LWS. y in hylle, 338, 433, 717, and syleðˑ, 292.

i-umlaut of ă + r + cons. = Anglian æ in wærgðˑu, 89; ăwærgdan, 416; e (Anglian, etc.) in underne, 1; edcerres, 451; cer, 698; and LWS. y in ăwyrgda, 316; cyrre, 538; ăwyrgda, 676.

ă after palatals > ea (sceal, 48; gesceafta, 442); æ (Anglian, etc.) in gescæft, 139; and e (Anglian, etc.) in gescefta, 203, 584; gesceft, 664; when affected by i-umlaut > LWS. y (scypend, 57; scyppend, 535); and e (Anglian, etc.) in sceppendes, 106.

u-umlaut of ă = Anglian ea (caples, 411).

ĕ in a closed syllable not influenced by sounds of adjacent syllables > e (swegles, 23; selde, 663) and Anglian æ (rægnas, 11; swægles, 124[?]).

self(a) is spelled with e in 9, 648; with LWS. y in 218, 306, 441, 545; and with non-WS. eo in 22 cases.

ĭ before r + cons. > eo (eorðan, 16; eorlas, 478; georror, 705); e (through Anglian 'leveling') in wercum, 48.
e remains unbroken in tōwerpan, 85.

ĭ before h + cons. > i in six, 15; riht, 207, 347, 688.

ĭ after palatals > i, y (gife, 572, 646; gylp, 254; bescyrede, 343), and e (Anglian, etc.) in sceldbyrig, 309.

u-umlaut of ĕ = eo in meotod, 2, 401, 697 (Anglian, etc.; cf. WS. metod, 668); WS. heolstres, 101; gescotu, 602 (Anglian, etc.); after w and before r, we have eo in weorulde, 211 (Anglian, Kent.); weoroda, 564; o in woruld, 59; e in werud, 33.

o/a-umlaut of ĕ = eo (Anglian, Kentish) in spreocan, 78;
bcoran, 158, 206; feola, 160; ongeotan, 301; feola, 477; Anglian ea (tcala, 557, 733); unumlauted, fela, 402, 497 (WS.).

ĭ is usually retained; LWS. y appears, e. g., in hym, 70;
syndon, 150; synd, 358; fyrndagum, 463.

ĭ before r + cons. > Anglian eo (beornende, 158; beorned, 414); affected by i-umlaut > i (afirde, 67; wirse, 24);
and y in wyrse, 125.

u- and o/a-umlaut of ĭ = eo (cleopað, 616); eo (Anglian, etc.) in leomu, 155; neoman, 198; hleonade, 433; weotod, 692.

i-umlaut of ŭ usually = y (afylled, 100; yfeles, 374; myrn-test, 689); LWS. (occasionally Anglian) i is also found in drihten, 47; hihte, 643; drihten, 665.

ā > WS. ǣ in dǣdum, 156; blǣd, 414; nǣre, 676; and
(of other dialects) in nēdran, 102; begēton, 474; ēðre, 704. Nēh, 339, is either LWS. or Anglian.

i-umlaut of ai = ǣ (ǣhte, 87; mǣndon, 386; lǣhte, 716) and ē (usually described as Kentish, but this ĕ occurs before dentals also in Mercian; see Bülbring, Elementarbuch, § 167, and Luick, Hist. Gram. d. Engl. Sprach, § 187) in clēne, 7, 18; gedēlde, 19; hēlende, 54; gelēdd, 88.

au before c, g, h > ēa (hēah-, 29; ēagum, 390, 718); Anglian or LWS. ē (hēhseld, 208; hēhenglas, 601; ēgum, 728); and Anglian ǣ in þǣh, 265.

i-umlaut of au = ī, ȳ (līge, 325; gelȳfdon, 416); ē (Anglian, etc.) in hēran, 54; bēgde, 381; lēg, 715.

OE. ēo before a guttural > ēo (lēoht, 28, 367); and the exclusively Anglian ī (līht, 68, 361, 679; sīc, 275).

i-umlaut of iu = ȳ, ī (lȳhteð, 105; gelīhtan, 431), and Mercian ēo (also Kentish) in ðēostrœ, 38; dēore, 82, 543.

VOWELS OF INFLECTIONAL SYLLABLES

For a list of lines in which œ is used for weak e, see Introduction, p. lix, n. 100.

Earlier un, instead of on, an, as the ind. plur. pret. ending, occurs in sceolun, 30, 41; gesawun, 718.

The tense-stem of the second weak conj. is usually either -od- or -ad-, but weakened -ed- is found in 25, 280, 320, 534, 620.

CONSONANTS

u is twice used for f (seolua, 13, 712).

On d for ð in MS. sīdas see note on 189[b].

Gecȳdde, 200, for gecȳðde is LWS.

h instead of c, in the word ac, is found in this proportion, 8:6. Sievers notes ah as a characteristic of Northumbrian, though it is found in the other dialects.

Later h for final g occurs in āstāh, 549, 563; beorh, 682; āstāh, 682; g is retained in āstāg, 717, 730.

g > i in eisegan, 36 (either Northumbrian or Kentish).

g omitted in menio, 476 (late), and LWS. middaneard, 165, 272.

Initial h is omitted in reðre, 99; nīgan, 208; insīðgryre, 456; gerēaw, 489; rēam, 717. See Sievers, Gram. 217, n. 2. It is inorganic in hrefnan, 500.

Gemination has not yet taken place in ātre, 79; nēdran, 102; tūdor, 659; whereas it is found in āttre, 40, 129, 163, 318; ǣrror, 151, 299; nǣddran, 337, 412; hlǣddre, 601.

All the relevant inflectional variations from the normal WS. are mentioned in the notes, and need not be repeated here. Some examples are listed under Vowels of Inflectional Syllables. All of these variations confirm the Anglian character of the original text.

SOURCES AND LITERARY RELATIONS

To lay as large a foundation of fact as possible upon which to base discussion of the more difficult problems of unity, date, and authorship, it will be well at this point to try to determine what are the sources from which the underlying conceptions of Christ and Satan are drawn, and in what relation it stands to other Old English poetry. The following investigation will fall naturally into three sections, in accordance with the threefold division in the subject matter of the poem.[29]

In any strict sense of the word, the laments of the fallen angels in lines 1-365 cannot be said to have a source. The story of their fall had developed gradually on the basis of a few scattered Biblical passages, with accretions from Jewish apocryphal writings, especially the Enochic literature. Gregory the Great (whose fondness for demonology is easy to discover) in his thirty-fourth homily on the Gospels, and in his elaborate allegorical comments on all the Biblical verses which could be conceived to have the slightest reference to the subject, gave the story a systematic and definitive form, which, with some modification to be ascribed to the [29] The structural outline of Christ and Satan, which will be found in the pages just preceding the notes, will, it is hoped, be of assistance to the reader in locating the various sections of the text mentioned hereafter.

genius of Milton, has come to stand on an equal footing among the western nations with many of the Scriptural narratives. But the Latin Fathers were, in general, too much occupied with the theological aspects of the story, and the moral edification to be derived from it, to evolve any such dramatic conception of the state of mind of the apostates themselves, in the various phases of their existence, as we find presented in Christ and Satan 1-365. Avitus of Vienne introduces a speech of Lucifer in which he deplores his lost glory,[30] but it is in the defiant spirit of Genesis B, not the plaintive tone of Christ and Satan. Aldhelm, on the other hand, seems to have been slightly more impressed with the pathos of the fallen Lucifer's situation. His language in describing the contrast between Lucifer's present degradation and former preëminence verges upon the sympathetic:

> Lucifer idcirco deserto climate cæli
> Nigra satellitibus stipatus Tartara farsit; > Cælicolas ista prostravit belva[31] superbos,
> Qui prius angelica fulserunt luce corusci, > Sedibus et superis florebant sorte beata:
> Tertia stellarum rueret dum portio præceps, > Lucida bis tantum manserunt sidera sursum.[32]

And the three lines (quoted in the note to lines 34 ff.) which Lucifer speaks in the riddle, Lucifer, are still nearer the tone of the Old English poem.[33]

[30] De Originali Peccato 89 ff. (ed. Peiper, pp. 214-5) ; tr. by Guizot, History of Civilization (tr. Hazlitt, 2. 152-3).

[31] I. e., Superbia.

[32] De Virginitate 2741-7 (ed. Ehwald) ; the passage occurs in what is often called De Octo Principalibus Vitiis (296-302).

[33] Pitman, The Riddles of Aldhelm (Yale Studies in English LXVII), p. 48.

On this slender basis Abbetmeyer (OE. Poetical Motives derived from the Doctrine of Sin, p. 18) makes Aldhelm not only the originator of the conception of a lamenting Satan, but also ascribes to him the authorship of the first vernacular 'plaint.' As Brown remarks in his review of Abbetmeyer (Mod. Lang. Notes 19. 223):
'If we must have a name to conjure with, Aldhelm may do as well as another.'

Abbetmeyer believes that from such passages as a beginning there evolved a cycle of 'Plaints of Lucifer.' First came the early portion of Genesis A, which narrates the story of the fall of the angels; next, the laments of Satan 1–365, also lines 454-6, and, in spirit, lines 665-733; and finally, the long dialogue between Guthlac and the demons in Guthlac A 529-656. Then there are 'incidental allusions to the Fall in the manner of the plaints' in Andreas 1185-94, 1376–85; Elene 759-771, 939-952; Christ 558 ff. [in reality only 561-5 are involved], 1520 ff. [to line 1549; compare also the phraseology of lines 1613-34]; Juliana 418-424; Prayers 4.
54-7 [not extended enough to be relevant].[34] The phraseology of Judith 112-7 also seems to have been influenced by that of some of the passages enumerated above.[35]

---

[34] Op. cit., pp. 16-19.

[35] Carleton Brown points out that the parallels which Abbetmeyer lists between Christ and Satan and Genesis A are extremely slight,
'only such as might be expected where two authors are narrating the same incident.' In Genesis A there is hardly a hint of lamentation on the part of the apostates. The verbal correspondences between Genesis A and the whole of Christ and Satan are so few, so scattered, and generally so insignificant as to make it doubtful whether there was any vital relationship at all between the two poems, even though both treat the themes of the Creation, the fall of the angels, and the fall of man. The poet, or poets, of Satan may well have read Genesis, but almost the only traces of familiarity with it to be discovered are in such mere tags as 2[b] (see Gen. 950), 117[b] (1840), 122[a] (930), 189[b] (905), 24[b], etc. (28), 501 (1719). Of course, many of the conceptions in the two poems are the same, but that was only to be expected. The similarities in diction between Satan and the two remaining so-called Cædmonian poems, Exodus and Daniel, and also the Beowulf, are negligible.

Grüters, whose theory is that portions of the OS. Genesis and Heliand were dependent on OE. poems, believes the following four parallels, which have no equivalents in the rest of the OE. corpus, prove that a connection subsists between Genesis B and Christ and Satan. He is unable, however, to make up his mind as to the exact details of the relation (see his Über einige Beziehungen zwischen Altsächsischer und Altenglischer Dichtung, pp. 33-4). His parallels

By far the most important literary relationship of Christ and Satan 1-365 is its connection with Guthlac A 529-656. Abbetmeyer was the first to make this clear. In the Vita Sancti Guthlaci, when the devils threaten that they will drag the saint with them into hell-fire, pretending that God has given him power over him, he merely replies:[28] 'Wă ĕow þĕostra bearnum and forwyrde tŭddre, gĕ syndon dŭst and acsan and ẏsela; hwă sealde ĕow earman, þæt gĕ mĭn ăhton geweald on þăs wĭtu tŏ sendanne? Hwæt, ic hĕr eom and-weard and gearu, and bĭdige mĭnes Drihtnes willan; for hwon sceolon gĕ mid ĕowrum lĕasum bĕotingum mĕ egsian?' In the poem the demons' threats and Guthlac's replies are expanded to above a hundred lines, the phraseology of which throughout is strongly reminiscent of the laments in Christ and Satan, and in some lines necessitates the assumption either of direct borrowing of one poem from the other, or of indebtedness on the part of both to some common source.

(which happen to fall within Sat. 1-365) are: Sat. 81-2 : Gen. 261 (cf. also 340) ; Sat. 55 ff., 22 ff. : Gen. 280 ff. (note esp. 283[b]) ; Sat. 179-185 : Gen. 296-300; Sat. 150-2 : Gen. 356-8. There are a few more possible correspondences between the two poems taken as wholes: Sat. 29 : Gen. 739 (hĕahgetimbro); Sat. 32[a] : Gen. 793[a]; Sat. 192-3 : Gen. 746[b]; Sat. 260[a] : Gen. 407[a]; Sat. 282 : Gen. 621 (womcwidas, which is not found elsewhere) ; Sat. 341-2 : Gen. 374-5; Sat. 456 : Gen. 718; Sat. 634[a] : Gen. 697; Sat. 705-7 : Gen. 345-6. Wülker, by expressly dating Christ and Satan later than Genesis B, seems to imply that the former may have been influenced by the latter (Gesch. der Eng. Litt. I. 59). Yet this may be drawing an inference he did not intend to suggest. At any rate, if either of the poems exerted any influence on the other in these rather unimportant passages, I think it much more probable that the OE. poem affected the OS. than vice versa. The conception of the personality of Satan in Genesis B is so striking that it seems hardly possible that, if the OE. poet knew the poem well enough to borrow phrases from it, he should have been able to resist letting some traits of the OS. characterization slip into his own; but there is not the slightest hint of such a thing having occurred.

[28] I quote the OE. version (chap. 5).

The poet of the Guthlac has written a dialogue of some dramatic power; but since the phrases which are common to the two poems in several instances have much more point in their setting in Christ and Satan than in the Guthlac, there can be little doubt that the author of the Guthlac borrowed either from Christ and Satan or from a common original, not the author of the latter directly from the former.

The following are the most important parallels:[27]

	Christ and Satan		Guthlac
22	Ðūhte him on mōde	635	Wēndun gē and woldun
	þæt hit mihte swā,		wiþerhycgende,
	þæt hīe wēron seolfe		þæt gē Scyppende
	swegles brytan,		sceoldan gelīce
	wuldres waldend.		wesan in wuldre.
	Him ðǣr wirse gelamp,		Ēow þǣr wyrs gelomp,
	ðā hēo in helle		ðā ēow se Waldend
	hām staðeledon,		wrāðe bisencte
	ān æfter ōðrum		in þæt swearte sūsl,
	in þæt atole scref,		þǣr ēow siððan wæs
	þǣr hēo brynewelme		ād inǣled. . . .
	bīdan sceoldon	643	þæt gē wærnysse
	sāran sorge;		brynewylm hæbben,
	nales swegles lēoht		nales blētsunga.
	habban in heofnum.
22[b]	þæt hit mihte swā.	548	hit ne meahte swā.

[27] In presenting this list of parallels and the others which come further on, I do not aim at completeness, but have tried to select only such lines as might have at least a modicum of significance for the literary problems which we must attempt to solve. Mere rows of identical kennings and alliterative epic formulas are of little assistance in ascertaining date, authorship, and the like. Most of the parallels given in the Introduction have been gathered independently by the editor, though, of course, many of them have been printed before, in one connection or another, in the studies of Groschopp, Kühn, Merrill and McClumpha, Abbetmeyer, and Grüters.

Christ and Satan		Guthlac
28	nales swegles lēoht habban in heofnum hēahgetimbra, ac gedūfan sceolun in ðone dēopan wælm.	554	Nū þū in helle scealt dēope gedūfan, nales Dryhtnes lēoht habban in heofonum, hēahgetimbru, seld on swegle.
31	niðær under nessas in ðone neowlan grund.	535	niþer under næssas nēole grundas.
49	bættran hām.	626	tō þām betran hām.
65	firenfulle.	532	firenfulra (not found in the 'Cædmonian' or Cynewulfian poetry).
128	fȳrlēoma . . . ættre geblonden.	640	ād inæled ættre geblonden.
160	firna herde.	522	synna hyrdas.
190	þā hē gehēned wæs.	569	sē ēow gehȳnde
192	þā hē God bedrāf in þæt hāte hof.		and in hæft bidrāf.
254	Þis is īdel gylp þæt wē ǣr drugon ealle hwīle.	633	for þām oferhygdum, þe ēow in mōd āstāg þurh īdel gylp ealles tō swīðe.

It will be noticed that all but one of the passages in Christ and Satan lie between lines 22 and 193. There are also a few correspondences between lines 1-365 and Guthlac A, exclusive of lines 522-656:

108	. . . gebīdan hwæt mē Drihten God dēman wille.	349	Forðan ic gebīdan wille þæs þe mē mīn Dryhten dēmeð.
120ᵃ	hēan and earm.	425	hēan and earm.
139	on þā beorhtan gescæft.	749	in þā beorhtan gesceaft.
206	Beoran on brēostum blīðe geþōhtas.	770	berað in brēostum beorhtne gelēafan.

The conceptions and turns of expression similar to those in the sections of Christ and Satan and Guthlac A just discussed, which are to be found in the lines cited from the Juliana, Elene, and Andreas,[45] since they occur in dialogues between saints and devils, may possibly be derived from the Guthlac directly, rather than from 'Plaints of Lucifer' or from Christ and Satan.

Abbetmeyer's hypothesis that Christ and Satan 1-365 evolved from a cycle of plaints, which in turn go back to one prototype, is quite plausible. However, though we may grant a common original for Guthlac 529-656 and Christ and Satan 22-193, Part I of the latter poem is itself really the only piece of evidence which might indicate the existence of such a cycle; and Part I in its entirety could have been framed by the repetition and elaboration of the leitmotif furnished by the poem which was also the source of Guthlac A 529-656, just as well as by piecing together several laments already at hand. It seems possible to account for the facts of relationship within the group of poems which we have discussed, on the basis of ordinary literary borrowing.

Up to the beginning of the first exhortation at line 194, the similarities between Christ and Satan and the poems of the Cynewulfian school (with the exception of those in the connected passages listed above[3A]) are very few. The following are the only significant ones:

Christ and Satan
47 herigað Drihten wordum and wercum.	Chr. 429	wē hine dōmhwate dǣdum and wordum hergen holdlice.
49 bīdan in bendum.	Chr. 147 (Harr. 88)	bidon in bendum.
82 hefdė mē drēam mid Gode.	Chr. 1637	āgan drēam mid Gode.

[45] See above, p. xxvi.

Christ and Satan

97	ic eom fāh wið God.	An. 1188	(cf. Beow. 811) eart ðū fāg wið God.
156	Nū ic eom dǣdum fāh, gewundod mid wommum.	Rood 13	and ic synnum fāh, forwunded mid wommum.
		El. 1242	Ic wæs weorcum fāh,. synnum āsǣled.

In the last 170 lines of the first part of Christ and Satan, in which the tone of exhortation becomes more apparent, the diction and phraseology is rather more reminiscent of the Cynewulfian poetry. The exhortations which are scattered throughout the first two parts should be compared especially with those in Exodus 531-547; Guthlac A 753-790; Christ 746-778, 1579-1694; and also with the passages at the end of the Elene, Phœnix, and Dream of the Rood, in which the joys of heaven, the pains of hell, or the terrors of Doomsday, are depicted. The following parallels will show with what poems lines 194-365 are most nearly related:

Christ and Satan·

210	behōfað . . . þæt him wlite scīne þonne hē ōðer līf eft gesēceð.	Chr. 1077	Ðonne bēoð bealde þā þe beorhtne wlite Meotude bringað.
		1581	Hē his sāwle wlite georne bigonge.
		848	Is ūs þearf micel þæt wē gǣstes wlite . . . georne biþencen.
217	Crīste gecwēmra.	Jul. 259	Crīste gecwēme.
		El. 1049	" "
233	wē [in] wuldres wlite wunian mōston.	Pr 16	in wuldres wlite wunian mōtan.
		Ph. 609	hȳ in wlite wuniað wuldre bitolden.
248	strang and stīðmōd.	Rood 40	strang and stīðmōd.

Christ and Satan

260	grimme grundas.	Chr. 1527	on grimne grund.
293	uppe mid englum, ēadigne dream.	Chr. 661	uppe mid englum ēce staþelas.
314	drēama drēam.	Chr. 580	drēama drēam.
		Ph. 658	" "
317	þæt hē Heofencyninge hēran ne wolde.	El. 367	hū gē Heofoncyninge hȳran sceoldon.
329	þǣr hēo oft fǣgerne folgað hæfdon uppe mid englum.	Chr. 390	Habbaþ folgoþa cyst mid Cyninge.
333	þǣr is wōm and wōp wīde gehēred.	An. 1554	Þǣr wæs wōp wera wīde gehȳred.
349	Nis nǣnig swā snotor nē swā cræftig nē þæs swā glēaw . . . þæt āsecgan mǣge, etc.	Chr. 219	Nis ǣnig nū eorl under lyfte secg searoþoncol tō þæs swīðe glēaw þe þæt āsecgan mæge, etc.
357	bringað tō bearme blōstman stences wyrta wynsume.	Ph. 542	stīgað tō wuldre wlitige gewyrtad mid hyra weldǣdum.
		658	hī Dryhtne tō giefe worda and weorca wynsumne stenc in þā mǣran gesceaft Meotude bringað.
		194, 529	wyrta wynsume.

    There is little evidence that the poet in 1-365 was drawing from Latin documents, either Scriptural, apocryphal, or patristic. There is but one instance (in 306-9) of what sounds like quotation, and even there the poet probably quoted from memory. However, the imagery employed, and also the general conceptions of the section, though they sometimes appear as if introduced or connected somewhat inconsequentially, are of such a nature that one should be wary of making a priori assumptions that the first part was written in an early time when 'extreme simplicity, directness, and rude passion' prevailed,[39] or taken down 'from the lips of an uneducated poet whose knowledge of sacred history and Christian doctrine came from what he had "heard with the hearing of the ear." '[40]   It is at least as probable that this part was composed by a man who possessed a fair stock of theological knowledge.   The faults which make lines 1-365 seem illogical at times are not due to lack of knowledge, but either to lack of architectonic power in the poet, or to peculiar circumstances in the evolution of the poem.[41]   If this caution is to be observed with regard to the first part, in which the poet had to draw largely on his imagination, we shall find it even more necessary to remember in considering the literary relations of the second part.

Hickes[42] and Kühn[43] were of the opinion that the apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus was the source of the first section of lines 366-664.[44]   It may be granted that the poet could

---

[39] Brooke, Hist. Early Eng. Lit., p. 326 and note 1.

[40] Bradley, 'The "Cædmonian" Genesis,' in Essays and Studies 6. 10-1.

[41] See below, the discussion of the unity of Christ and Satan.
I have also found in writing the commentary that many features which have been thought to indicate illiterateness, illogicality, or indebtedness to popular Teutonic conceptions, are either to be laid to faulty transcription, or can be otherwise explained by a reinterpretation of the text, or by adducing illustrative passages from religious literature.

[42] Thesaurus I. 133-4.

[43] Op. cit., pp. 11-15.   In the same year, Groschopp expressed the opinion that the poet had neither the Bible nor Nicodemus before him (op. cit., p. 262).

[44] Although it is unnecessary to attempt a full account of the development of, or a bibliography of the literature on, the tradition of the 'Descensus Christi ad Inferos' (called in early English the 'Harrowing of Hell'), a brief sketch may be found of some service.   The most specific of the New Testament passages which seem to point to have known the 'gospel,' but he certainly never draws from it directly; hence it must be classed among the ultimate sources. Abbetmeyer[45] seems to favor a view previously suggested by Ten Brink,[46] to wit, that lines 366-664 may be a fragment of an exposition 'of the second article, or even of the whole Creed.' Ten Brink's second and more acceptable suggestion,[47] which underlies recent discussions of the sources, renders unnecessary the assumption that there is any conscious reference to the Creed, in spite of the fact that each of the sentences of the Creed which mention the events in Christ's life subsequent to the Crucifixion is represented by a section in the poem. (Even though these events are all represented, there is much additional matter interspersed between them.) According to Ten Brink's second view, it is 'quite possible that this fragment [?] is a homily for Easter a belief that Christ descended to preach to the dead (according to later views, merely to liberate the righteous) is 1 Pet. 3. 19-20. However, many other verses, both in the narrative and epistolary books, of which the exact import was not so clear, were held to refer to such an event. See Mt. 27. 52 (all Biblical references are to the Vulgate); Jn. 5. 25; Acts 2. 24, 31; Rom. 10. 7; Eph. 4. 9; Phil. 2. 10; Col. 1. 20. The Descent was also thought to be prefigured in the following Old Testament passages: Ps. 15. 10; 23. 7 ff.; 85. 13; 106. 10-4; Isa. 42. 7; 45. 2; Hos. 6. 1-3; 13. 14; Zech. 9. 11. The details of the story, however, were most thoroughly worked out in the second part of the Gospel of Nicodemus, which bears the separate title, Descensus Christi ad Inferos, and which exists in three separate versions, two Latin and one Greek. The Descensus has been assigned by scholars variously to the third, fourth, or fifth centuries. In patristic literature I shall cite only three references which are of special interest for Christ and Satan: Epiphanius, Homilia II in Sabbato Magno (Patr. Gr. 43. 451 ff.); Pseudo-Augustine, Sermo CLX (Patr. Lat. 39. 2060); Eusebius (Alexandrinus?), Sermo de Confusione Diaboli (Latin version edited by E. K. Rand, Mod. Phil. 2. 261-278; pp. 277-8 contain a condensed and inconsequential account of the events after Christ's death).

[45] Op. cit., p. 12.
[46] Early Eng. Lit. 1. 87-8.
[47] Ibid., p. 87, n. 4.

Sunday, bereft only of its beginning, and with contents similar to the prose homily in the Blickling Homilies' (i. e., the seventh of the collection).[48] Förster[49] believes that a Latin homily based upon (or possibly a lost version of) the 160th Pseudo-Augustinian sermon, eked out by the entire story of the Descent as it must have been told in the unmutilated work of which only a fragment is preserved in the Book of Cerne,[50] is not only the original of the seventh Blickling homily, but also the source of the version of the Harrowing in Christ and Satan, the Old English Harrowing of Hell, lines 84 ff., and the Mercian Martyrology, p. 50 (Herzfeld's edition). The connection between these works is indubitable.

　Grau pushes the theory still further:[51] 'Setzt man in die 7.
Blicklinghom. statt der erhaltenen fassung des zweiten teiles die der älteren Hattonpredigt ein, so erhalten wir einen text, von dem ich nicht anstehe zu behaupten dass er bezw. seine (lat.) vorlage quelle von Christ und Satan 2 gewesen ist.' Grau thinks with good reason that the second part of the seventh Blickling homily, as we have it, has been abbreviated.
The account of the Last Judgment breaks off suddenly after the enumeration of the signs of the seven last days. Since there are many similarities in the phraseology with which these signs are described in Bl. Hom. 7 and the homily of MS. Hatton 116, Grau believes that the latter portion of the Blickling homily originally resembled that of the Hatton homily, which contains a complete version of the Last Judgment, and a brief description of the joys of heaven, as well as a short exhortation.

　[48] Brandl also thinks that the poet used as a source some Latin homily similar to the Blickling Paschal homily. See Paul's Grundriss 2. 1046.
　[49] Archiv für das Studium der Neueren Sprachen 116. 306.
　[50] The Prayer Book of Aedeluald the Bishop, commonly called the Book of Cerne, ed. Kuypers, pp. 196-8.
　[51] Quellen und Verwandtschaften der Älteren Germanischen Dar-stellungen des Jüngsten Gerichtes, pp. 194-6.

It is altogether probable that some homily similar to those mentioned above furnished a model for many of the structural features of Christ and Satan 366-664. However, that homily must have been very different from either the Pseudo-Augustinian, Hatton, or Blickling homily, if it was in any very vital sense a source of the section as a whole; for there are only four lines in the poem in which any of these has left clear verbal traces, namely, in the words with which Eve's address to Christ is introduced,[12] and in her offering her supplication to him in the name of her daughter Mary.[13] Here the borrowing is almost literal, and would seem to be immediate, whereas elsewhere in Christ and Satan the similarities with the homilies are only of a general sort. I give below the order of events which a homily such as Grau has reconstructed would present, so that, by comparison with the Structural Outline of the poem, the reader may decide whether the homily should be considered a direct source: Christ descended to the earth to save mankind. After the Jews had laid many plots against him, he suffered death on the cross, and went to harry hell. The devils express their terror at his approach. Then, after the captives give vent to their joy, comes the 'harrowing.' All the captives except Adam and Eve being released, each one of the first pair individually prays for mercy, and is liberated. When the Lord had plundered hell of its spoil, he came forth from the tomb, showed his wounds to the disciples, and thereafter ascended to heaven, and sat down at the right hand of the Father. After the signs of the seven days have been given, the Judgment scene follows. The benediction of the redeemed and the malediction of the damned are quoted. Finally, there is a description of the bliss of heaven, based on the Apocalypse, and the homily ends with an exhortation. It should be kept in mind that such a condensed résumé as this tends to emphasize the similarity with the poem, since most of the events just listed are at least represented in it. I do not mean to dispute the evident fact that Christ and Satan owes much in its organization to such homiletic synopses. But the poet omits or treats very cursorily several features of the narrative as told in the composite homily, and presents much more frequently events, or even whole scenes, not mentioned there (e. g., the reference to Judas' announcement to the captives of Christ's approach, Christ's address to the liberated patri-archs in heaven, the scene in Galilee, Pentecost, and the fate of Judas). Therefore we need not assume that any special homily was the source of lines 366-664. The parallels which Grau draws between the Judgment scene in MS. Hatton 116 and that in Christ and Satan are so vague as to be against the dependence of the poem on the homily.

<hr/>

[12] 408-9; see note on 408[b].   [13] 438-440; see note.

Although the poet may have referred to the text of the Bible once or twice, it is not probable that he was drawing directly from books in lines 366-664. Indeed, some of the store of reading upon which he drew does not seem to have been very fresh. However, there is every reason to believe that he had a fair general acquaintance both with the Bible and with other religious literature. His learning does not appear to have been perfectly digested, but he could not, with any propriety whatever, be described as simple or unlearned.

The following lines contain the most important resemblances in phraseology between the second part of Christ and Satan and other Old English poems:

Christ and Satan		Genesis A
630 wērige gāstas.		90	wērige gāstas.
369 wrōht onstalde.		911,932	wrōhte onstealdest.

		Daniel
507, 555 Drihtnes dōmas.		32, 745	Drihtnes dōmas.

		Beowulf
641 fǣhðe and firne.		137, 879, 2480	fǣhðe and fyrene.
631 helle hæftas		163	hwyder helrūnan
hwyrftum scrīþað.			hwyrftum scrīþað.
432 wið earm gesæt.		749	wið earm gesæt.

Christ and Satan	Guthlac A
463 fēond geflēmed.	107 Fēond wæs geflŷmed.
442 ēce Ordfruma ealra gesceafta.	610 ēcne Onwealdan ealra gesceafta.
581 Dǣleð dōgra gehwǣm … help and hǣlo hæleþa bearnum.	654 þǣr is riht Cyning help and hǣlu hæleþa cynne.
460 Hōfon hine mid him handum hālige.	702 hōfon hine hondum.
405 fēond oferfohten.	775 fēond oferfeohtað.

Guthlac B

564 Þā cōm wolcna swēg hālig of heofonum.	1256 ðā cwōm lēohta mǣst hālig of heofonum. (Cf. also An. 88.)

Christ

495 Fērde tō foldan þurh fǣmnan hād.	92 fǣmnan hād.
	444 ācenned wearð þurh clǣnne hād.
581 Dǣleð dōgra gehwǣm Drihten weoroda help and hǣlo hæleþa bearnum.	427 his forgifnesse gumum tō helpe dǣleð dōgra gehwǣm Dryhten weoroda.
657 Cyning in cestre.	578 Cyning on ceastre.
490 [þæs] carcernes clom ðrōwade.	735 in carcerne clommum gefæstnad. (Cf. also An. 130.)
637 clom and carcern.	801 Þǣr sceal forht monig on þām wongstede wērig bīdan hwæt him æfter dǣdum dēman wille. (Cf. Ja…)
620 Þonne stondað þā forhtan … bēoð beofigende hwonne him Bearn Godes dēman wille.	706-7.)
607 hlūd gehēred.	So 492, 835, 949.
602 ofer burga geseotu.	1240 ofer burga gesetu.

Christ and Satan	Christ
640 stǽleð [fēondas] fǣhðe and firne.	1374 on þæt frǣte folc firene stǽleð (note con- text).
472 ic ēow þurh mīne mihte geworhte, Ādām ǣrest, etc.	1380 Hwæt! ic þec, mon, mīnum hondum ǣrest geworhte.
489 Þa mē gerēaw þæt mīn handgeweorc [þæs] carcernes clom ðrōwade.	1415 ðā mec ongon hrēowan, þæt mīn hondgeweorc on fēonda geweald fēran sceolde.
628 Āstīgað . . . in þæt wītehūs.	1536 gefeallað . . . on wīte- hūs. (Cf. also Gen. 39.)
494 tō wrece gesette.	1602 tō wrace gesette.
556 Ūs is wuldres lēoht torht ontȳned.	1673 wuldres lēoht torht ontȳned.
567 tō þām hālgan hām.	1675 tō þām hālgan hām. (So An. 1683.)

Compare also Chr. 466-7 with Sat. 558-562; 491-4 with 564-5; 531-2 with 580; 727 with 549; and 928-930 with 568-9.

	Andreas
584 hē āna is ealra gescefta Wyrhta and Waldend.	324 hē is Cyning on riht Wealdend and Wyrhta wuldorþrymmes, ān ēce God eallra gesceafta. (Cf. 700-3.)
556 Ūs is wuldres lēoht torht ontȳned, þām ðe teala þenceð.	1611 Ēow is wuldres lēoht torht ontȳned, gif gē teala hycgað.
661 Swā wuldres Weard wordum herigað þegnas ymb Þēoden.	871 Ūtan ymbe Æðelne englas stōdon, þegnas ymb Þēoden·

Christ and Satan (Cf. 235-6.)	Andreas þûsendmǣlum, heredon. . . .
	Phœnix
412 þurh nǣddran nið.	413 þurh nǣdran nîþ.
459 in þā mǣran burh (== heaven).	633 in þǣre mǣran byrig (= heaven).
624 tō þǣre mǣran byrig.
499 hū hēo mē dēaðes cwealm . . . hrefnan mihten.	642 hē dēaþes cwealm . . . ræfnan sceolde.
560 ǣr hē in þā mǣran gesceaft . . . bringan wolde hāligne gāst.	660 in þā mǣran gesceaft (= heaven) Meotude bringað, etc.
	Dream of the Rood
549 hē on bēame āstāh.	40 gestāh hē on gealgan hēanne. (Cf. also 34 and Chr. 1492.)
662 Þǣr is þrym micel.	139 þǣr is blis mycel.

The striking thing about these lists is the evidence they offer for a fairly close relationship between Christ and Satan 366-664 and the poems written or influenced by Cynewulf. That so many poems of such an ambitious nature should be hardly conceivable indebted to a single unfinished one is to Christ and Satan. Hence, the obligation must be assigned not adequately meas- The similarities in diction, however, do ure the general resemblance of the poem, beginning from line 190,[14] with the Cynewulfian poems. Wherever, in the latter, there occur extended exhortations, or passages describ- ing the bliss of heaven or the torments of hell (often in con- nection with the Judgment Day), one is sure to recognize an affinity in conception and tone between these passages and those in Christ and Satan which treat the same themes. This may be verified, by way of example, in the last one hundred lines of the Christ, where there are not very many verbal correspondences with Christ and Satan.

[14] See p. xxxi.

The third part of the poem, which recounts Christ's temptation, is incomplete, and is broken by a lacuna of several lines, at the very least. For the temptation proper, the poet, as was often the case in Part II, would seem to have depended upon his well-stocked, but not especially accurate, memory of Gospel story. I have been able to discover nothing analogous to the long episode which follows the actual temptation. Christ bids the tempter make a complete survey of hell, that he may realize the absolute supremacy of his adversary, and the tempter obeys the command. It is just possible that the poet took his hint from a sentence in the Blickling homily on the temptation,[55] but, until some more adequate source is proposed, we must credit to the poet's own genius the conception as well as the execution of this, one of the two or three most remarkable passages in the poem.

The verbal similarities, in the case of a section of sixty-eight lines, which treats a subject not found in other Old English poems, naturally cannot shed much light on the problems presented by the poem as a whole.

Christ and Satan

675, 690 Þā him andswarode	An. 202, 343, 510 Him ðā ond-swarude
ēce Drihten.	ēce Dryhten.
688 riht cyning.	Gu. 654 ryht Cyning.
692 þē is sūsl weotod.	An. 889 Þām bið wræcsīð witod.
	951 is þē gūð weotod.
	1365 þē synd wītu þæs grim weotud.

[55] Page 31 (quoted in the note on 691 ff.).

    Christ and Satan

696 sorga mǣste.   Chr. 1082 sorga mǣste.

                                 (Cf. also Chr. 1209;

                                      Gen. B 364.)

705 Wāst þū þonne þē geor-

      nor.   Beow. 821 wiste þē geornor.

                   An. 932 wāst nū þē gearwor.

                   El. 945 wīte ðū þē gearwor.

715 se wonna lēg.   Beow. 3115 wonna lēg.

731-2 ongunnon…reordian. An. 469 Ongan ðā reordian.

    Significant parallels with the 'Cædmonian' poetry are conspicuously absent. · The only possible echo is wið God wunne, 705 (cf. Gen. 77; Ex. 514), but similar phrases occur also in the Beowulf, Christ, and Genesis B.

UNITY AND GENESIS

    One question must now be met squarely before we can discuss the date and authorship. Is Christ and Satan one, two, or three poems, or is it a collection of fragments? W. D. Conybeare was the first to apply the word 'fragments' to the poem.[54] He describes Book II as 'introduced by several [54] John J. Conybeare, Illustrations of Anglo-Saxon Poetry, edited by his brother William Daniel Conybeare (1826), p. 189. Thorpe repeats this: 'In the second book, we find little else than a series of unconnected fragments.' He thinks it singular that neither by the scribe nor by Junius are they noticed as fragments (p. VII, note). Thomas Wright held the 'latter folios of the manuscript of Cædmon' to be 'nothing but the stringing together of such passages of the original as the scribe could at the moment recall to memory' (Essay on the State of Literature and Learning under the Anglo-Saxons, p. 24). Ettmüller suggests a bibliographical explanation of the present state of the poem: Book II is full of gaps; probably there were at the very first several independent poems on the Descent which were collected in one book; only after the dropping out of several leaves did these come to be considered a single poem (Handbuch der Deutschen Litteraturgeschichte, p. 135; see also Scopas and Boceras, p. XIV).

---

long harangues of Satan and his angels, . . . so little connected with the sequel or with each other, and so inartificially thrown together, as rather to resemble an accumulation of detached fragments than any regular design.' Rieger first suggested that Christ and Satan is composed, not of an indefinite number of fragments, but of a very small number of independent poems (in his opinion, two).[57]

In 1877, Ten Brink[58] propounded a theory later accepted by Kühn,[59] Sievers,[60] Wülker,[61] and Bentinck Smith.[62] He considered each of the three parts (1-365, 366-664, 665-713) to be a separate poem[63]—the first part complete, the second preserved in a fragmentary state, the third a single fragment.
Possibly each of the last two belonged to a greater whole.
These, after they had been mutilated, were 'appended as a connected whole to the Fallen Angels in the existing manuscript.' The first part shows the Old English tendency to variation applied to the larger proportions of a poem.
Kühn gave, in support of this threefold division, lists of phrases for the Deity, the devils, man, hell, saying, seeing, going, and also other phrases which occur more than once in

---

[57] Zs. f. D. Phil. 7. 6: 'Der Satan schliesst vielmehr mit v. 365, und mit dem folgenden beginnt ein gedicht von ähnlichem inhalt und ähnlicher anlage wie Cynewulfs Christ.' Ten Brink, Wülker, and Bentinck Smith all echo this comparison with the Christ, which, however, is pertinent only in a very general sense.

[58] Gesch. der Engl. Litt. (1877). My references are to the English translation (1883). Christ and Satan is discussed on pp. 86-8 of Vol. I.

[59] Über die Angelsächsischen Gedichte von Christ und Satan.

[60] Beitr. z. Gesch. der D. Spr. und Lit. 10. 499.

[61] Grundriss z. Gesch. der Ags. Litt., p. 131, note; *Gesch. der Engl.
Litt.* 1. 59. Wülker, as stated above, also makes a threefold division of the text in the Bibl. der Ags. Poesie.

[62] Cambridge Hist. Eng. Lit. 1. 53.

[63] Ziegler also (Der Poetische Sprachgebrauch in den sogen. Cæd-monschen Dichtungen, p. 174) speaks of Christ and Satan as 'three poems.'

each of the first two parts.[44] These lists are practically worthless as evidence, because no allowance is made for the unequal length of the three sections, or for the differences in subject-matter.   Naturally, for example, the numerous phrases descriptive of hell in lines 1-365 will not be largely represented in lines 366-664, in which hell is by no means so important as in the former section.   Kühn brushes aside the verbal similarities between the parts, by saying that many of them are found in other poems, and that they are too few to disprove his thesis.   He points out what no one would think of disputing, that 1-365 are prevailingly lyric in tone and repetitious in style, whereas 366-664 and 665-733 are epic, the last section being further distinguished by its lack of exhortation.   The metrical statistics which Kühn presents, without considering either their relevancy or the possibility that the differences they show might in certain instances have some relation to the subject-matter of the three parts, are altogether inconclusive with regard to the question of unity.

   In the same year (1883) that Kühn's dissertation appeared, Groschopp proposed still another theory.   Groschopp was impressed by two facts concerning Christ and Satan.   On the one hand, there are indisputable links connecting the three parts, in spite of their differences in tone; on the other hand, the poem seemed to him full of gaps, errors, and inconsistencies in the contents, derangements in the metre, and disorder in the structure.   (He was especially disturbed by the position of the Temptation scene, coming as it does after the Ascension, and, for that matter, after Doomsday.)   To obtain an explanation of the genesis of the poem which would harmonize these conflicting characteristics, Groschopp felt driven to this conclusion: 'In Crist und Satan reste einer einzigen grösseren dichtung vorliegen, die ein restaurator

---

[44] Balg followed this same unsatisfactory method in trying to prove that the four poems of the Junius MS. are by different authors (Der Dichter Cædmon und seine Werke).

unter einfügung eigener sätze und anschauungen versucht hat, wider zu einem ganzen zu vereinigen.'[45]   Only fragments of the quasi-Heliand, and these not very long, lay before the restorer.   Groschopp makes of this well-meaning person a veritable scapegoat, who bears away all the sins and deficiencies of our extant text—'So lassen sich, wie ich glaube, alle ungereimtheiten nach inhalt und form erklären'[46]—truly a comfortable hypothesis.   There is, however, absolutely no evidence for the existence of the larger poem, and the fact that we possess homilies which contain much the same sort of concatenation of the events of Christ's 'post mortem life' as is found in Part II (the only section of the poem which even seems to point to a Gospel harmony, such as the Heliand) renders unnecessary the assumption that we have in Christ and Satan fragments of a larger whole.
Moreover, a considerable proportion of the inconsistencies, and much of the apparent disorganization of the poem, would not have seemed so serious to Groschopp if he had tried to be more sympathetic, and less literal, in interpreting the text itself.   Groschopp's theory, as he developed it, has appealed only to Brooke[47] among later writers.

   Abbetmeyer[48] accounts for the poem by a genetic theory.
Most of the first and older portion developed gradually, as a cycle of 'Plaints of Lucifer,' from one original vernacular

[45] Op. cit., p. 252.
[46] P. 260.
[47] Brooke points out a convenient division of Part I into three sections, the breaks coming after lines 224 and 315. As he says, these sections end 'with three similar hymns of praise' (more properly speaking, with three exhortations). Brooke's interpretation of this division is unconvincing: 'They are like three lays, into which a Scôp might divide his one subject, to be sung on three separate evenings; and such may have been the form of Cædmon's religious songs. The others, too [i. e., Parts II and III], may be separate Cantatas, within a general paraphrase of the history of redemption' (op. cit., p. 326, note; p. 329).
[48] Op. cit., pp. 10-2, 16-9.

plaint. Because of the close connection which they show to have been Guthlac A, Satan 1-224 should be considered to have been originally a distinct poem, 'as it were, growing out of' the first part of Genesis A. Within this section the three monlogues spoken by the same fire-breathing demon (75-...
126-159, 160—189) are independent variants of the ... theme, intended to be recited by themselves. For the ...
Part I, Abbetmeyer accepts Brooke's division int... large sections at lines 224 and 315. In these, the...
plaint (varied, of course) was made the basis of pi... tation. It was also used to set off the Descensu... lines 444-456. Regarding the composition of the... whole, Abbetmeyer says: 'It would seem that S... did not originally belong to the same cycle as th...
poems. . . . In [the] original draft, the desce... was presumably of the same length as the other ...
the course of time, this topic received numerous...
tions from various sources, among others, as has b... from Gen. A and Sat. 1-365. When once this t... dominated, the remaining sections would be regarde... way, an exhortation, and thus the whole poem, Sat....
was embodied in our manuscript as a parallel or v...
Sat. 1-224, 225-315, 316-365.' The third part, lines... is a homily on the temptation of Christ, placed in ou... script not 'because it treated of Christ, but be... described some of the sufferings of Satan; for the...
the real subject of the Sat. poems.' The closing lin... to be the beginning of another plaint of the demons.

* This is extremely doubtful. Compare the preponderanc... theme of the Descent in Bl. Hom. 7, and the Pseudo-A... homily. The comparison that may be drawn between C...
Satan and the homilies vitiates Abbetmeyer's whole concepti... way Parts I and II were put together.
* Abbetmeyer supplements his theory with another sugg...
19): 'In Sat. 1-365 we may have a collection and arrang...
Plaints made for the purpose of dramatic recitation.

Abbetmeyer has done a valuable service in tracing the origins of the story of the fall and the laments of the apostates, and especially in indicating the relation of Christ and Satan to Guthlac; but one cannot help agreeing with Brown in regard to the worth of his exposition of the structure of the former poem: 'In such an elaborate process of scissoring and re-arranging as Dr. Abbetmeyer has undertaken, the chances of arriving at the original components of the poem are, of course, extremely slight.'[71]

Of late, the tendency has been to revert to the theory that the poem is one.[72] Graz examined the verse with far greater thoroughness than Kühn had done, and came to the conclusion that the metrical characteristics of Christ and Satan were distinctly in favor of unity.[73] In 1902, Barnouw, on the basis of his investigation of the article and weak adjective, declared it unified.[74] The most plausible defense of the unity of Christ and Satan is that by Brandl.[75] He says: 'Das ganze ist ein versuch, das erlösungswerk nach den grundsätzen des gefolgschaftswesen darzustellen.' In the second part he sees the happy service of Christ presented as a contrast to the wretched life which Satan and his fellows probably recited the introduction and exhortations, some other ecclesiastic or some layman might take the role of Satan, and a choir the parts of Satan's followers. Practically the same material later makes up some of the Miracle Plays.' This is interesting enough as pure speculation.

[71] Mod. Lang. Notes 19. 223.

[72] About midway between the theory of multiplicity and that of unity stands the view of Ebert (Allgem. Gesch. der Lit. des Mittelalters im Abendlande 3. 255): because of the close relation of the two parts in content, language, and style, Part I is to be considered an independent introduction to Part II; Part III is a fragment of another poem.

[73] Metrik der sog. Cædmonschen Dichtungen, pp. 72, 73.

[74] Textkritische Untersuchungen nach dem Gebrauch des Bestimmten Artikels und des Schwachen Adjectivs in der Ae. Poesie, p. 108.

[75] Op. cit., p. 1046.

lead in hell, as depicted in the first part. The third part relates the only direct conflict which, according to the Bible, took place between the Redeemer and the leader of hell.
Brandl remarks the similarity between Christ and Satan and the seventh Blickling homily, mentioning in particular the fact that in the homily, as in the poem, before the entrance to Limbo is burst open, the devils hold an anxious consultation.

After his thorough study of the language, Frings[76] was of the opinion that, from the grammatico-metrical standpoint, no argument can be brought against the conclusion that the poem is by one author. Because the original Anglian text lay before the scribes, the theory that the poem could have been put together in the West Saxon transcription from fragments, by either one or several poets, is excluded.
This is incontrovertible, but Frings' study can throw no light upon the question whether the poem could have been put together in the Anglian original itself, from fragments by one or more Anglian poets.

In the light of the facts of literary relationship, as well as of the discrepant opinions just reviewed, it would be rash to attempt to give a categorical answer to the question, 'Is Christ and Satan a single, unified poem?' It is, however, impossible to belittle the elements of unity in the whole.
They are such as can not be completely accounted for by the simple assumption of a restorer of fragments. Brandl has clearly expressed one element of unity, in the contrast between the blessings to be obtained by becoming a faithful thane in the comitatus of God and Christ, and the miseries incurred by the members of the comitatus of Satan. Others have noted the contrast drawn throughout the poem, but especially in Parts I and III, and in the passages descriptive of heaven in Part II, between the torments of hell and the joys of heaven. Grein, by his title, Christ und Satan, suggests that the figures of Christ and Satan are set over against each other, and that the poem is built around the struggle between these two adversaries. Not only is such a struggle set forth in the accounts of the Descent and Temptation, but it underlies the whole of Part I, in which Christ is represented both as the creator of the universe and the object of Satan's hatred, the being against whom his revolt is particularly directed. It is to be noted, also, that the character of Satan and his relation to his followers are exactly the same in Part III as they were in Part I. The differences in style which have been supposed to exist between the three parts are either imaginary, or are to be explained by the fact that the lyric, epic, and didactic genres have been blended in one poem, each presiding over its own more or less unified sections. The first part, in which the elegiac prevails, is not unnaturally very repetitious; for the subject, Satan's loss of heavenly bliss and present misery, is limited in scope. The second part, which is narrative, is, as we should expect, more straightforward. (It is far from innocent of repetition, however.)

---

[76] Op. cit., pp. 235-6.

The verbal resemblances point very decidedly toward unity.
I list first those phrases which are found in all three divisions.[77]

[77] The more obvious kennings and alliterative formulas are omitted.
Parallels found only in Christ and Satan are distinguished by the asterisk. However, I have not run down some of the others, so that there may be a few more unique parallels than I have indicated.

I	II	III
26 in þæt atole scref.	419 in ðis hāte scref.	727 geond þæt lāðe scref.
73 geond þæt atole scref.	633 in þæt sceaðena scref.
129 " " " "
28 males swegles lēoht	449 Nalles wuldres lēoht	692 þē is sūsl weotod
habban in heofnum,	habban mōton,	geara tōgegnes, hēahgetimbra,	ah in helle grund.	nalles Godes rice.
ac gedūfan sceolon
in ðone dēopan wælm.
73 earme ǣglēcan.	448 earme ǣglēca.	713 earm ǣglēca.
	579 " "
98 helle duru.	So 380, 467.	So 723.
126 se wērega gāst.	630 wērige gāstas.	731 þā wērigan gāstas.
219 Drihten Hǣlend.	So 576.	So 683.

These are neither numerous nor especially significant.
But that there should be as many as there are is surprising.
I now list the parallels between Parts I and II, I and III, II and III, in order.

I	II
*20 Ādām ǣrest,	473 Ādām ǣrest
and þæt æðele cyn.	and þæt æðele wīf.
41 sūsel þrōwian.	395 atol þrōwian.
42 nalles wulres blǣd habban.	508 habbað wuldres blǣd.
	593 þǣr is wuldres blēd.
46 þǣr nū ymb ðone Ēcan	552 secgan Drihtne þanc
æðele stondað	dǣdum and weorcum.
heleð ymb hēhseld,	661 Swā wuldres Weard
herigað Drihten	wordum herigað
wordum and wercum.	þegnas ymb Þēoden.
(Cf. 220.)
49 bīdan in bendum.	414 beorneð in bendum.
54, 364 Hǣlende hēran.	So 595, 645.
63 Segdest ūs tō sōðe.	430 Segdest ūs tō sōðe.
70 hæfdon hym tō hyhte.	643 him tō hihte
335 nabbað [h]ē tō hyhte.	habban sceoldon.
*87, 117, 254, 279	454 atol tō ǣhte.
eall (ēðel) tō ǣhte.
*102 in ðissum neowlan genipe.	446 in þæt neowle genip.
180 in þis neowle genip.
*103, 157 wītes clom.	444 wītes clomma.
	453 wītes clom.
105 dimme and deorce.	455 dimne and deorcne.
116 swā hē ǣr dyde.	525 swā hē ǣr dyde.
123, 142, 293, 330	391, 591 uppe mid englum.
uppe mid englum.
127 ealle ætsomne.	526 ætsomne ealle.
128 fāh in fyrnum.	479 fēond in firenum—fāh is ǣghwǣr.
141, 253 wuldres lēoht.	So 449, 556, 617, 650.

<table>
<tr><td colspan="2">I</td><td colspan="2">II gilka</td></tr> <tr><td>161</td><td>atol ǣglǣca, ût of helle.</td><td>579</td><td>earm ǣglǣca innon helle.</td></tr>
<tr><td>*162, 343</td><td>wîtum wêrig(e). 428, 449</td><td></td><td>wîtum þǎ mid ha... wêrig(e).</td></tr>
<tr><td>169</td><td>mid handum ... gerǣcan.</td><td>437</td><td>rǣhte ...</td></tr>
<tr><td>184, 305</td><td>Meotode cwêman.</td><td>655</td><td>Meotode cwêma...</td></tr>
<tr><td>190</td><td>hwearf þǎ tô helle.</td><td>400</td><td>hwearf þǎ tô h...</td></tr>
<tr><td>217</td><td>Criste gecwêmra.</td><td>596</td><td>Criste cwêma...</td></tr>
<tr><td>230</td><td>Nû is gesêne.</td><td>441</td><td>nû is gesêne.</td></tr>
<tr><td>232</td><td>Drihtnes mihtum.</td><td>605</td><td>þurh Drihtn...</td></tr>
<tr><td>*235</td><td>sang ymb seld.</td><td>663</td><td>sang æt seld...</td></tr>
<tr><td>236</td><td>þûsendmǣlum.   509, 569,</td><td>632</td><td>þûsendmǣlu...</td></tr>
<tr><td></td><td>Only 3 times elsewhere, in Ex., An__ Jud.</td><td></td><td></td></tr> <tr><td>*237</td><td>wunodon on wynnum. 508,</td><td>593</td><td>wuniað (wu... wynnum.</td></tr>
<tr><td></td><td></td><td>556</td><td>in wynnum</td></tr>
<tr><td>243</td><td>dôgra gehwilcne.</td><td>581</td><td>dôgra gehwǎ...</td></tr>
<tr><td>258</td><td>Cyning of cestre.</td><td>657</td><td>Cyning in ce...</td></tr>
<tr><td>281</td><td>Him wæs Hǣlend God wrâð geworden
for womcwidum.</td><td>428</td><td>swylce him V cyning
for onmǣdlan
eorre geworde...
</td></tr>
<tr><td></td><td></td><td>452</td><td>Seoððan him v Drihten
wrâð geworden...</td></tr>
<tr><td>288</td><td>ûp tô englum.</td><td>625</td><td>ûp tô englum.</td></tr>
<tr><td>295</td><td>beorhte scînað geǣlige sâwle.</td><td>652</td><td>And ymb þǎ w... wlitige scînað
engla gâstas</td></tr>
<tr><td>309</td><td>sôðfǣste men ... scînað in sceldbyrig.</td><td></td><td>and êadige sâw...</td></tr> <tr><td>316</td><td>se âwyrgda wrâðe geþôhte þæt hê, etc.</td><td>371</td><td>[Þâ] Sâtânus swearte geþôht...
etc.</td></tr>
<tr><td>*320</td><td>wîde geond windsele wêa cwǎnedon.</td><td>386</td><td>wîde geond wi... wordum mǣnd...</td></tr>
<tr><td>322</td><td>swylce onǣled.</td><td>421</td><td>þearle onǣled.</td></tr>
</table>

I

341 hāte onǣled. (Cf. 40, 97.)
327 nalles ūp þanon.

346 nergendne Crīst.

*359 Fæder mancynnes . . .
　　hīe gesegnað
　　mid his swīðran hond.

361 lǣdað tō līhte
　　þǣr hī līf āgon.

II

634 And nō seoððan
　　þæt hīe ūp þonan.

570 nergende Crīst.

615 And hēo gesēnað
　　mid his swīðran hond
　　Cynincg alwihta.

589 Laðað ūs þider tō lēohte . . .
　　þǣr wē mōton, etc.

I

30 ac gedūfan sceolun
　　in ðone dēopan wælm.
*80 in wītum word[e] indrāf.
*111 dēofla menego.
*153, 357 brōhton tō bearme.
181 āworpen of worulde.

*185, 336 wēan and wītu.

III

670 in helle gedēaf.

731 wordum in wītum.
730 dēofla mænego.
672 Brōhte him tō bearme.
669 þe ǣr āworpen wæs
　　of heofonum.

715 wēan and wītu.

II

368, 614, 651 Godes rīce.
390 ēagum gesāwon.
454 egsan gryre.
544 hē mid hondum
　　Hǣlend genōm.
559 fēowertig daga.
628 āstīgað nū, āwyrgde,
　　in þæt wītehūs.

III

693 Godes rīce.
718 ēagum gesāwun.
728 egsan gryre.
680A Þā hē mid hondum
　　genōm.
667 fēowertig daga.
691 Gewīt þū, āwyrgda,
　　in þæt wītescræf.

Taken together, these parallels are by no means so few as Kühn would lead us to suppose,[16] and there is a respectable number of them which do not appear in other poems. In

---

[16] Op. cit., p. 26.

short, a much stronger case can be made out for the unity than for the multiplicity of Christ and Satan. Yet we must account for the presence in the poem, both of elements that are certainly among the sources of Guthlac A, which scholars agree in placing either early in Cynewulf's career or before him, and of others which are either echoes or actual borrowings from poetry assigned to Cynewulf's later period or to his imitators.

   The present editor's hypothesis concerning the evolution of Christ and Satan is as follows. The poem is essentially the work of one poet. This poet's first intention was to compose a narrative poem on the events in the history of Christ after his crucifixion, similar in general to the synthetic works exemplified in the seventh Blickling homily.
Of course, Christ's descent into hell was the most stirring incident in the series, and the poet's imagination was kindled by it.[19] He wished to make it as dramatic as he could. By presenting the dialogue between Eve and the Saviour, and the speech of Christ to the liberated patriarchs in heaven, which have no real counterparts in the typical accounts of the Harrowing, he strengthened the latter part of the episode.
For his introduction to it, the poet saw possibilities in another sort of material. The terror of the devils in anticipation of Christ's assault upon their realm was expressed in speeches of moderate length, both in the Gospel of Nicodemus and in the Blickling homily. But the poet thought he could work in the story of the fall of the evil angels, and introduce certain laments of theirs which would show the contrast between their original glory and their present (and impending greater) degradation—such laments as he was familiar with in another poem or (possibly) collection of poems.[20]

   [19] As was that of the Blickling homilist. The Harrowing of Hell takes up almost one-half of the extant homily.
   [20] The portion of Christ and Satan which seems most certain to have been taken more or less directly from another poem (or other poems) on the woes of Lucifer is that between lines 20 and 193.

By these means he could give a more elaborate background for his great scene. The laments were originally set in the period immediately, or not long, after the fall, and had already been drawn upon by the poet of Guthlac A to enrich his dialogue between the saint and the demons. It is not impossible that the poet of Christ and Satan knew Guthlac A; at least the similarities in phraseology, in sections not concerned with devils and hell,[61] seem to indicate some very slight relation between the two poems.

The poet, however, did not succeed in remodeling his extraneous material so that it joined neatly to the episode of the Descent. He was carried away by this new theme; added other laments, and even a description of the devils' condition written in the third person (316 ff.) ; and was led into long didactic passages exhorting his readers to choose the service of God, and escape the torments inflicted upon the devils for their rebellion; with the result that he wrote in Part I what is almost an independent poem. Moreover, the relation between the characters Christ and Satan had so taken hold of his imagination that he could not refrain from returning to it again in the third part, in spite of the necessity, under which this laid him, of committing a gross anachronism. The idea of confronting the two great adversaries with each other, and representing Satan as becoming finally conscious of the enormity of his crime and its punishment, and of subjecting him to the reproaches and taunts of his own followers, in order that his complete overthrow and isolation might become apparent, was too tempting to be renounced.[62]

---

[61] See p. xxix.

[62] The manuscript gives only very slight evidence that the account of the Temptation was even to be considered a distinct section of the poem; not even a small capital introduces line 665, which begins in the middle of a MS. line without a break. A small capital s had just been used in 661. The presence of this capital might indicate that the new section should begin at 661, instead of at 665, and such a Old English poets have never been commended especially for their constructive ability, and hence the lack of articulation and centralization so evident in Christ and Satan need not prejudice us against the conclusion that the poem is the product of a single molding spirit. Moreover, since the clearly unfinished state of the poem makes it probable that the present transcription derives (possibly through one or more intermediary copies) from an unimproved first draft, we cannot be certain that the poet might not have succeeded, if he had tried to bring to completion his evidently expanding design, in more perfectly adapting his material, and in reforming the proportions of his piece.

AUTHORSHIP AND DATE

Junius, who is credited with attaching the name of Cæd-mon to the poems in MS. Junius XI, was not very positive in his attitude concerning their authorship. He merely says that, since they correspond in style, genius, and argument to what we learn from Bede's account (Hist. Eccl. 4. 24), when he refers to them hereafter, he will use the name of Cæd-mon.[33] He later calls his edition 'Cædmonis Monachi Para-phrasis Poetica.'[34] Groschopp was the last scholar who, on division is about as good as the one which has always been accepted without comment.

   [33] Observationes in Willeramum, p. 248.
   [34] Hickes, Junius' pupil, says that Junius ascribed (inscribit) the poems to Cædmon, but did not definitely assign them to him (non adjudicat). Hickes believed the whole collection to have been written by an imitator of Cædmon in the tenth century, but that Book II was later than Book I (Thesaurus 1. 133). Thorpe, with the qualification that due allowance must be made 'for such interpolations, omissions, and corruptions of the original text as Cædmon . . . may be supposed to have suffered at the hands of ignorant transcribers,' reverted to the theory of Cædmonian authorship, which he affirmed more definitely than Junius had done. However, of the second book he says, 'As the orthography used in this part of the poem is less pure, the basis of independent investigation, felt prone to assign Christ and Satan to Cædmon. Because of its 'simple and popular' style of presentation, he considered the poem (that is, the longer original poem, from the fragments of which, according to Groschopp, the extant Christ and Satan was put together) among the earliest specimens of Anglo-Saxon poetry which have come down to us, and believed that it is possibly one of Cædmon's. Yet he was of the opinion that it was not at all related to the Genesis, Exodus, and Daniel.[64] Brooke,[65] Bentinck Smith,[66] and Bradley,[67] overemphasizing the rudeness and simplicity in form and content, echo the same opinion with slight variations.[68]

Grein omits before the title, Christ und Satan, the word 'Cädmons,' which he had prefixed to the titles of the other three poems of Junius XI,[69] and in his grammar says that and the language less grammatical, than in the first part, it is perhaps to be considered as less ancient' (see pp. VIII, XII).

Ettmüller opposed Junius' and Thorpe's opinions, on the grounds that the language is Saxon of the ninth century, the style epic, not didactic, and the author possessed of much knowledge of 'rebus civili-bus' and various other learning, all of which facts are in disagreement with Bede's account. See Scopas and Boceras, p. XIII.

[64] Op. cit., pp. 264-5.

[65] Op. cit., pp. 326-330.

[66] Loc. cit.

[67] Essays and Studies 6. 10-1.

[68] Bouterwek is very vague: 'Cædmon's poems' are of varying worth, and neither by one poet nor of one time (p. CXL); had Hickes recognized in the linguistic peculiarities of Book II the Northumbrian dialect, he would hardly have been averse to assigning it to Cædmon. Yet Bouterwek is not wholly certain that the dialect of Book II is Northumbrian (p. CCXXXIV).

Dietrich (Zs. f. D. Alt. 10. 311, 367) merely says that the author of the second book is much inferior to that of the first, and that the language of Cædmon is not so old as that of Beowulf and Cynewulf.

Of Book II, Morley (English Writers 2. 95) assigned only the 'Temptation fragment' to Cædmon.

[69] Bibl. der Ags. Poesie.

Christ and Satan is less likely than these three to rest upon a Cædmonian original.[91] Ten Brink believed that his three poems probably had different authors, and that there can hardly remain any doubt that they 'belong to a much later period than the Old Testament poems.' He dates them at the end of the ninth century, or the beginning of the tenth.[92] Wülker[93] agreed with Ten Brink concerning the authorship.
He dated the three poems before 950, but after Genesis B.[94]
From the use of the definite article and weak adjective, the value of which as an exact criterion of chronology has been seriously doubted, Barnouw dated Christ and Satan at 880
A. D., contemporary with the Elene and Azarias.[95] Later (in 1914) he expresses this opinion: 'In an Old English poem of a time which still remembered the first years of Christianity, a Satan who lamented, but did nothing, would be unimaginable.'[96] Grau had felt somewhat similarly: 'Ich muss gestehen, dass ich eine literarische behandlung der person des Satans . . . in der frühzeit, etwa der Cynewulfs, für gänzlich unmöglich halte. Diese periode beschäftigt sich nur mit der einfachen, grossen lichtgestalt des himmelskönigs Christus. Die komplizierteren probleme des Crist und Satan hätten in der zeit des eben überwundenen heiden-tums m. e. keinen anklang gefunden.'[97] Brandl, who also depended chiefly on the article-adjective test which Barnouw

[91] Kurzgefasste Ags. Grammatik, p. 8.

[92] Op. cit., pp. 88, 376. Kühn also assumes three authors, and assigns the poems to a relatively late period (pp. 35-8, p. 28).

Balg (Der Dichter Cædmon und seine Werke) affirmed that the poems of MS. Junius XI are by seven authors, and that none of them could be assigned with certainty to Cædmon. (Balg believed that the Genesis, Exodus, and Daniel contained long interpolations, but did not challenge the unity of Christ and Satan.)

[93] Grundriss s. Gesch. der Ags. Litt., p. 131, n. 1.

[94] Gesch. d. Eng. Litt. I. 59.

[95] Op. cit., p. 230.

[96] Anglo-Saxon Christian Poetry, pp. 24 ff.

[97] Op. cit., p. 196.

had employed, placed the poem shortly after Cynewulf,[98] whereas Richter specified the latter half of the eighth century.[99] A few apparently archaic spellings made a relatively early date, about 750, seem most acceptable to Frings.[100]

The theory that Cædmon had any share in the authorship of Christ and Satan should be abandoned. It is doubtful whether any one would have thought of assigning this poem to him had it not been appended in the MS. to three other poems which seemed to correspond to Bede's list of that poet's works. The fact that it treats certain New Testament subjects which Bede reported that Cædmon versified would hardly by itself have prompted scholars to connect it with Cædmon's name. If Christ and Satan had been bound up in the Vercelli Book, it might never have been mentioned in connection with Cædmon. The similarities it presents with the two poems which are generally considered most likely to preserve some of the work of the 'first English poet,' namely, Genesis A and Daniel, are insignificant.

In seeking an appropriate date we have plenty of leeway— from ca. 680 to ca. 950 A. D. Evidently no one set of the [100] See op. cit., p. 233. Frings points out that in one case breaking has not taken place (tōwerþan, 85), but isolated cases of the same phenomenon are found in Rushworth¹ (āwerþ, werþe), which is not a relatively early text. Sīdas (for sīðas), 189, which Frings considers an example of a very old spelling, is probably a scribal error (see the note on this line). The use of æ for the weak vowel e in 31, 38, 53, 141, 182, 361, and 733, in a North Anglian text, is inconclusive as a criterion of age. Forms similar to most of these occur sporadically in later documents, and in two or three of the lines cited, æ has been produced by the Corrector's addition of e to a as a quick and inconspicuous method of emending (so probably in 38 and 361, and certainly in 141 and 182). Such scanty and doubtful evidence is of no validity. Besides, all but two of these archaic-looking spellings are found between 20 and 193, so that they might be assigned to the older poem from which the poet borrowed.

---

[98] Loc. cit.

[99] Chronologische Studien sur Angelsächsischen Literatur, pp. 34-5, 101.

criteria which have been used can be trusted alone. I can see no reason why an early date must be accepted. The literary relations of the poem would indicate a time after the close of the period of Cynewulf's literary activity, that is, after, roughly, the last decades of the eighth century, or the beginning of the ninth.[101] On the other hand, the arguments for a relatively late date (i. e., after 850) are wholly inconclusive.   Clearly the article-adjective test may point in either of two directions (compare Barnouw with Brandl), and deductions from the Zeitgeist depend on subjective impressions.   Besides, the character of the presentation and characterization has been adduced as final proof both of Cædmonian authorship, which would push the poem back to the end of the seventh century, and of the latest datings (compare Groschopp, Brooke, and Bradley with Grau and Barnouw). It does not seem that what we know of the poem would warrant assigning a more precise period for the composition of Christ and Satan than 790-830 A. D.

[101] See Cook, Elene, Phœnix, and Physiologus, p. xiii.

CHRIST AND SATAN

TEXT

THE TEXT

Abbreviations are expanded without notice, except that those which are unusual are mentioned in the variants. Emendations are enclosed in square brackets. Italics indicate change in the order of letters. Underscoring marks letters or words offered as emendations by the Corrector. Erased letters are not printed in the text unless the erasures can be assigned with absolute certainty to the Corrector, or unless their absence renders the meaning doubtful. Probably by far the greater number of the erasures were made by the Corrector, but it is preferable to print the forms as they have been preserved, rather than try to decide in every case who is responsible for the change. Wülker's text is full of inconsistencies in the treatment of these erasures. The numbering of the lines first used by Grein and Wülker has been retained. The numbers of lines which are not included in Grein's numbering are given as, e. g., 680 A. In the right-hand margin from 366 to 733 will be found Wülker's numberings of Parts II and III.

Insignificant normalizations by later editors are omitted from the variants. Unless otherwise specified, the Corrector's alterations there recorded were made by the addition of letters above those letters they were intended to replace. The interrogation-mark indicates that an emendation was put forward with some diffidence. The letter n., after an abbreviation standing for a scholar's name, means that the emendation or suggestion was proposed in a note.

ABBREVIATIONS

B.¹	Bouterwek (text).	H.¹	Holthausen (Indog. Forsch.).
B.²	Bouterwek (notes).
Br.	Bright ('Jottings').	H.²	Holthausen (Anglia Bb. 5).
C.	The Corrector.	J.	Junius.
Cs.	Cosijn (Anglosaxonica).	K.	Kock (Jubilee Jaunts and Jottings).
D.	Dietrich (Zs. f. D. A. 10).
E.	Ettmüller.	S.¹	Sievers (Zs. f. D. A. 15).
G.¹	Grein (Bibliothek).	S.²	Sievers (Rhythmik).
G.²	Grein (Sprachschatz).	T.	Thorpe.
G.³	Grein (Germania 10).	W.	Wülker (Bibliothek).
GK.	Grein-Köhler (Sprachschatz).	Wms.	Williams.
Gz.	Graz (Beiträge).	Wnrs.	Wieners.

CHRIST AND SATAN

    Þæt wearð underne eorðbūendum þæt Meotod hæfde miht and strengðo ðā hē gefestnade foldan scēatas.
    Seolfa hē gesette sunnan and mōnan,
5 stānas and eorðan, strēam ūt on sǣ, wæter and wolcn, ðurh his wundra miht.
    Dēopne ymblyt clēne ymbhaldeð Meotod on mihtum, and alne middangeard.
    Hē selfa mæg sǣ geondwlītan, 10 grundas in [g]eofene, Godes āgen Bearn;
    and hē ārīman mæg rægnas scūran, dropena gehwelcne; daga enderīm seolua hē gesette þurh his sōðan miht.
    Swā se Wyrhta þurh his wuldres Gāst 15 serede and sette on six dagum eorðan dæles, [and] ūpheofon,

Page 213 of MS.—Wülker gives as the title: Die Klagen der Gefallnen Engel.—1ᵃ MS. ð of wearð partly over an erased þ.—1ᵇ MS. e erased after eorð-; J., T., E. eorðebuendum; *B.*¹ eorðe buendum; *B.*² as MS.—2 C. hī (him) after meotod above the line.—5 *J., T., B.*¹, B. uton; Cs. and utsæ (?).—6ᵃ MS. wæt; *T., B.*¹ sæwæter; C. wolcen; Edd. except J. wolcen.—6ᵇ E. wuldra.—7ᵃ MS. ymblyt; *J., T., B.*¹, *E., G.*¹, *G.*², W. ymblyt; *G.*¹ yðmyð; *H.*¹ ymbhwyrft; Br. ymblyhte.—7ᵇ *G.*¹, *G.*², Gs., Br. dene; *H.*¹ dēre (?); Cs. dryhten for dene (?); GK. derne (?); T. n. uphaldeð (?); E. uphealdeð.—9 MS. se changed to sæ by a later hand (*S.*¹).—10 MS. heofene; C. changes the final e to o and adds n above the line; *J., T., B.*¹, E. heofene; *S.*¹ thinks heofenen the original reading; W. heofenen; *G.*¹, Gs., Cs. geofene.—11 *B.*² rægnscura.—14 *B.*¹ for swa se, wise (?); *H.*¹ wyrhta eac.—16ᵃ T. n.: should grammatically be dalas; *B.*¹, Br. dælas; E. dalas; *G.*¹ dæles.—16ᵇ *MS., J., T., G.*¹, W. up on heofonum; T. n.: error for and upheofon, or upheofonas; *B.*¹ upon heofonas; E., Cs., Br. and upheofon.

[and] hĕanne holm.   Hwă is þæt ðe cunne orðonc clēne   nymðe ēce God?
      Drēamas hĕ gedēlde,   duguðe and geþĕode:

20 Ādăm ērest,   and þæt æðele cyn, engla ordfruman,   þæt þe eft forwarð.
Dŭhte him on mōde   þæt hit mihte swă, þæt hīe wēron seolfe   swegles brytan, wuldres waldend.   Him ðēr wirse gelamp,

25 ðă hēo in helle   hăm staðeledon, ān æfter ōðrum,   in þæt atole scref, þēr hēo brynewelme   bīdan sceoldon sāran sorge;   nales swegles lēoht habban in heofnum,   hēahgetimbra,

30 ac gedŭfan sceolun   in ðone dēopan wælm, niðær undẹr nessas   in ðone neowlan grund, grēdige and gīfre.   God āna wāt hŭ hē þæt scyldige werud   forscrifen hefde.

17ᵃ MS. henne; scribe adds a above the line; J., T., B.¹, W., Cs.
heanne; MS. holme; E., G.¹ heahne holm; H.¹, Br. and heanne; W. n. agrees that we should have holm; Cs. ofer holme (?) or heahe holmas (??); Br. holm.—18ᵃ C., T., B.¹, E., G.¹ change to clæne; G.¹ n. clænne (?); C. vel buton (over nymðe).—19ᵃ C., T., B.¹, E., G.¹ gedælde.—19ᵇ T. n.· error for geteode. creavit; E. geogoðe, if emendation is necessary; Gs., Br. geogoðe.—20ᵃ G.¹ Adame; G.¹
Adam; E. ærest scop.—21ᵃ E. ordfruma.—21ᵇ J. misreads ꝥ te; B.¹
þætte; C. forwearð; T., B.¹, E., G.¹ forwearð.—22ᵃ C. heom.—23ᵃ
C. alters to wæron (æ from e) sylfe.—23ᵇ Gs., Wnrs. bryttan.—24ᵇ
G.¹ þæs for ðær; G.¹ bær; MS. wise; C. adds ors above ise; T., B.¹, E. wors; G.¹, Gs. wirse; W. wirs; C. gelomp.—25 E. hie on.— 27ᵃ E. hie; B.¹ hie on.—27ᵇ MS. sceoden; scribe adds l above the line; C. writes o above the second e; E. sceoldon.—28ᵇ o canceled and then erased between e and g of swegles.—29ᵃ Second b of habban added above by scribe.—29ᵇ MS., J., T., B.¹, E., G.¹, W. heahgetimber; B.¹ heahgetimber; G.¹ n. heahgetimbra (?); H. (Angl. 44.
354) heahgetimbru or possibly heofnes heahgetimbrum.—30 E., G.¹, W., Cs. sceoldun.—31ᵃ J., E., G.¹ niðer under; B.¹, T., W. undær.— 32 C. (W.) grædige.—33ᵃ Scribe adds ge to scyldi above line.—33ᵇ C.
alters to hefde; E. hæfð; W. hæfde.

Cleopa[ð] ðonne se alda   ût of helle, 35 wriceð wordcwedas,   wêregan reorde, eisegan stefne: 'Hwǣr côm engla ðrym, þe wê on heofnum   habban sceoldan?
Þis is ðêostræ hâm,   ðearle gebunden fæstum fŷrclommum;   flôr is on welme, 40 ǣttre onǣled.   Nis nû ende feor þæt wê sceolun ætsomne   sûsel þrôwian, wêan and wêrgu,   nalles wulres blǣd habban in heofnum,   hêhselda wyn.
Hwæt! wê for Dryhtene iû   drêamas hefdon, 45 song on swegle   sêlrum tîdum, þǣr nû ymb ðone Êcan   æðele stondað, heleð ymb hêhseld,   herigað Drihten wordu[m] and wercum;   and ic in wîte sceal bîdan in bendum,   and mê bættran hâm 50 for oferhygdum   ǣfre ne wêne.'
Ðâ him andsweradan   atole gâstas,

34 MS. cleopad; Edd. cleopað; C. ealda.—35 Scribe adds word above cwed-.—36 D. egesan.—37 MS., Edd. ða þe.—38 MS. þe erased before ðeostræ; J. (in Errata) se ðeostræ; MS. first had ðeostra; æ looks a little like C's work; E., G.[1] þeostre.—40 G.[1], B.-T. Sup. is.—41[a] Cs. we ætsomne.—41[b] Gz. susl.—42[a] MS., J., T., B.[1], B., W. wergum; B.[1] mid wergum; D., G.[1], Cs. wergun (Cs.: i. e., wergung); G.[1] wergung; Frings and Unwerth, PBB. 36. 559, wergum (= wergm); Sperber, PBB. 37. 148-9, Wms. an (on) wergum; Sievers, PBB. 37. 339, GK. wêrgu.—42[b] MS. nelles; scribe cancels first e, writes a above it; J. wuldræs (wulres in Errata); E., W. wuldres; G.[1] wuldres leoht.—44[b] dreamas begins page 214.—46 e of ecan from æ by erasure.—47[a] First e of heleð seems to have been altered to æ, probably by C.; T., E., B.[1], G.[1] hæleð; MS. ym; b above and between y and m has been erased; scribe added b after ym and above line.—48[a] MS. wordun; Edd. wordum; C. wiorcum.—49[b] MS. bættran; b erased; scribe (probably) had put a dot under a of æ; Edd. bættran; MS. for canceled after bættran.—51 MS. 7 sweradan.

swarte and synfulle,   sûsle begrorene:
'Þû ûs gelærdæst   ðurh lyge ðînne þæt wê Hêlende   hêran ne scealdon.

55   Dûhte þê ânum   þæt ðû âhtest alles gewald, heofnes and eorþan,   wære hâlig God, Scypend seolfa.   Nû earttû sceaða[na sum] in fŷrlocan   feste gebunden.
Wêndes ðû ðurh wuldor   ðæt þû woruld âhtest, 60   alra onwald,   and wê englas mid ðec.
Atol is þîn onsêon!   habbað wê alle swâ for ðînum lêasungum   lŷðre gefêred.
Segdest ûs tô sôðe   þæt ðîn sunu wære Meotod moncynnes;   hafustû nû mâre sûsel.'

65   Swâ firenfulle   fâcnum wordum heora aldorðægn   [a]n reordadon on cear[i]um cwidum.   Crîst hêo âfirde, drêamum bedêlde.   Hæfdan Dryhtnes lîht for oferhygdum   ufan forlêton; 70   hæfdon hym tô hyhte   helle flôras, beornende bealo.   Blâce hworfon

52ᵃ C. swearte.—52ᵇ MS., J., T., B.¹ begrorenne; E., W. begrorene; D. begrowene (?); G.¹ accepts begrowene; H.¹, Sievers (in note on Cs.) behrorene; Cs. susl begnornedon.—54ᵃ C., B., G.¹ hælende.—54ᵇ C. sceoldon.—57ᵃ Wnrs. scyppend.—57ᵇ MS. nu eart tu earm sceaða; possibly a letter erased after earm; J. ðu earm 7 sceaða; T., B., G.¹, W. as MS.; B.¹ earmsceaða; G.¹ n. sceaða earm (?); Br. nu, sceaða, eartu, or nu eartu, sceaða earma; MS. after sceaða letters are erased, which were spaced thus : : : : : (see note); W. n.: ne wyrn or the like erased.—58 B.¹ fyre locum.—59 E. woruldan.—63 C. alters first e of segdest to æ; E. sægdest.—64ᵇ E., G.¹ hafas; Gz. susl.—66 MS. unreordadon; E., B.¹ onreordadon; G.¹, K. (Plain Points and Puzzles, p. 24) an reordadon.—67ᵃ MS., J., T., E., B.¹, G.¹, W. cearum; S.¹ (p. 456) cearigum; H.¹ ceargum; J. cwiðdun; Cs. cearium.—68ᵃ C. erased e of bedelde and added æ above; T., E., B.¹, G.¹ bedælde.—68ᵇ C. erased i of liht, added eo above; T., E., B.¹, G.¹ leoht.—69ᵇ C. forlæten by altering e and o; Edd. forleten.—71ᵇ C. hweorfon; E., G.¹ hwurfon; B.¹, E., H.¹ blâce; G.¹ blâce.

scinnan forscepene, sceaðan hwearf[e]don, earme æglēcan, geond þæt atole scref,
for ðām anmēdlan þe hīe ǣr drugon.

II

75   Eft reordade ōðre sīðe fēonda aldor. Wæs þā forht agēn, seoððan hē ðes wītes worn gefēlde.
      Hē s[p]earcade, ðonne hē spreocan ongan, fȳre and ātre; ne bið swelc fæger drēam 80   ðonne hē in wītum word[e] indrāf:
      'Ic wæs iū in heofnum hālig ængel Dryhten dēore; hefde mē drēam mid Gode, micelne for Meotode, and ðeos menego swā some.
      Þā ic in mōde mīnum hogade 85   þæt ic wolde tōwerpan wulres lēoman, Bearn Hēlendes, āgan mē burga gewald eall tō ǣhte, and ðes earme hēap þe ic hebbe tō helle hām gelēdde.

*72*ᵇ MS., Edd. hwearfdon; *S.*ᵃ (p. 316), *H.*ᵃ, Gs., Cs. hwearfedon.— 74 MS. medlan; C. (? scribe) adds an above.—76ᵇ *MS., J., T., B.*ᵃ, E., W. forworht; *G.*ᵃ, Gs. forht; *G.*ᵃ n. þy forhtor gen(?); Cs.
forhtra gen; Wms. forworhta gen.—77ᵃ C. erased e of ðes, added æ above; Edd., except J., W. ðæs.—78ᵃ MS. at first swearcade; scribe changes c to t; *J., T., B.*ᵃ, W. sweartade; E. n.: perhaps spearcade;
*G.*ᵃ, Cs. accept spearcade.—78ᵇ MS. ðoñ.—79ᵃ C., Edd. attre.—79ᵇ
MS. n of ne made from h by erasure; J. he.—80ᵃ D. inwitum.—80ᵇ MS., Edd. word; *H.*ᵃ word[gid]; Br. þa (or þas) word; K. word = word[e]; H. (Angl. Bb. 30. 2) þæt, þa, or þas word; E. indræfeð;
*B.*ᵃ utadraf; Gs. (Metrik) in adraf; Gs. (Beiträge) ut adraf or ut þorhdraf.—82 C. puts a dot under e of dryhten, adds e at end; *J., T., B.*ᵃ dryhtene; *E., G.*ᵃ dryhtne.—85ᵃ in or the like erased after ic; C. towiorpan; *G.*ᵃ toworpan.—85ᵇ Edd. except B. wuldres.—86 C., E. hælendes; agan begins p. 215; *C., G.*ᵃ geweald.—87 o of MS. ðeos looks as if erased; Edd. ðeos.—88 C. alters second e of geledde to æ; E. gelædde.

89-90   Wēne þæt tācen sutol   þā ic āseald wes on wærgðu, niðer under nessas   in ðone neowlan grund.
        Nū ic ēow hebbe tō hæftum   hām geferde alle of earde.
               'Nis hēr ēadiges tīr,
        wloncra wīnsele,   nē worulde drēam, 95   nē engla ðrēat;   nē wē ūpheofon āgan mōten.   Is ðes atola hām fȳr onǣled.   Ic eom fāh wið God.
        Ēce æt helle duru   dracan eardigað hāte on reðre;   hēo ūs helpan ne magon.
100   Is ðes wālica hām   wītes āfylled;
        nāgan wē ðæs heolstres,   þæt wē ūs gehȳdan magon in ðissum neowlan genipe.   Hēr is nēdran swēg, wyrmas gewunade.   Is ðis wītes clom

89ᵃ C., Edd. except Junius wene ge; GK. socen for tacen (?).— 89ᵇ MS. and wærgðu þa ic of aseald wes; J. wærg ðu; T. of-aseald; n.: several ll. wanting; B.¹ gap of more than one hemistich after wærg-ðu; E. tacen, teonfulle gastas/swutol—wæs; G.¹ teon—wærgðu; G.¹
Wms. þa ic of swegle; W. wærgðu . . ./þa ic of . . . a. w./; H.¹ þa ic aseald wes of swegles wlite; Cs. of swegle adrifen and asæled wæs; Wms. wærgðu gesyne.—91ᵃ C. cancels e of nessas, writes
æ above; T., B.¹, E., G.¹ næssas.—91ᵇ ðone from ðonne.—92ᵇ MS.
gefærde, a erased; C. geferede; J., T., B.¹, G.¹ gefærde; W., Wms.
gefærede.—93ᵃ C. (possibly another man), T., G.¹ ealle.—93ᵇ T. n., G.¹, Cs. eadigra.—94ᵇ C. wynsela (a by alteration); Trautmann in Wnrs.
wynsele (because winsele is a false 'dehnwort').—95ᵃ e of engla from æ by erasure; Edd. except E. ængla.—95ᵇ Cs. nu for ne (?); C., Edd. except J. ne we; C. upp-.—96ᵃ C., Edd. except J. agan ne m.— 96ᵇ ðes made by writing tall s over erased capital of os.—97ᵃ MS. fyre (? e added by another corrector); Edd. except J. fyre.—98 MS. e of ece from æ; W. æce; H. (Eng. Stud. 27. 205) omits ece; E. dura; Gs., Wnrs. durù helle.—99 E., G.¹, Gs. hreðre; C. hy.—100 MS. ðes from ðæs; J. ðæs.—101ᵃ n of nagan over erased capital.—101ᵇ G.¹
behydan; a of magon from æ.—102ᵇ e of her and sweg from æ.— 103 B.¹ gewuniað; is þis witehus / clommum feste g.; E., G.¹, Wms. þes.

fęste gebunden.   Fēond seondon rēðe, 105 dimme and deorce.   Ne hēr dæg lÿhteð for scedes sciman,   Sceppendes lēoht.
    'Nū āhte gewald   ealles wuldres;
þær ic mōste in ðeossum atolan   ēðele gebīdan hwæt mē Drihten God   dēman wille, 110 fāgum on flōra.   Nū ic fēran cōm dēofla menego   tō ðissum dimman hām.
Ac ic sceal on flyhte   and on flyge ðrāgum earda nēosan,   and ēower mā, þe ðes oferhÿdes   ord onstaldon.
115 'Ne ðurfon wē ðęs wēnan,   þæt ūs Wuldorcyning æfre wille   eard ālēfan, ēðel tō æhte,   swā hē ær dyde, ēcne onwald;   āh him alles gewald, wuldres and wīta,   Waldendes Sunu.
120 Forðon ic sceal hēan and earm   hweorfan ðÿ widor, wadan wrǣclāstas,   wuldre benēmed, duguðum bedēled,   nǣnigne drēam āgan

---

104 C. erased the hook of ę of fęste and changed to æ; Edd. except B. feste; E. fæste.—105ᵃ MS. ⁊ (and) is written over erasure of the letters on.—105ᵇ lyhteð by C. (?); see note.—106ᵃ T. n. says his translation based on scuwan or the like for sciman; E. scuwan.— 107 C. ic above l. after ahte; Edd. accept ic; Edd. iu for nu.—108ᵃ
E., G.¹, W., Wms. ær for þær; T. n., B.¹ gap of few ll. after moste; *
Wms.* atolum.—108ᵇ MS. first e of eðele from æ; T., B.¹, G.¹, W., H.¹ æðele.—109 C. wylle.—110ᵃ T. n. flore (?); B.¹ fegum; B.¹, E.
flore.—110ᵇ B.¹ fēran; E. ferjān.—112ᵃ c of ac written over erased h (? by C.); MS., Edd. on flyge and on flyhte; Gz. reverses the order.—113 T., B.¹ ma þe/.—114ᵃ E., G.¹ þæs.—114ᵇ C. onstealdon.— 115ᵃ J. þes; other Edd. þæs.—115ᵇ Gz. wuldrcyning.—116 C. alyfan.
—117 eðel by erasure from æðel.—118ᵃ MS., J. ece; C., T., B.¹, E., G.¹, W. ecne; C. onweald.—118ᵇ C. ealles geweald.—119ᵃ MS. wulres, scribe inserts d above.—119ᵇ C. wealdendes.—120ᵃ C., Edd. except J. sceal after ic; MS. ear + ma on next l.; scribe (? C.) adds m to ear and cancels ma; J. earma ma.—120ᵇ C. hwyrfan, widdor.—122ᵇ Trautmann in Wnrs. nænge.

uppe mid englum, þes ðe ic ær gecwæð þæt ic wære seolfa swegles Brytta, 125 wihta Wealdend.' (Ac hit him wyrse gelo

III

Swā se wērega gāst wordum sæde his earfoðo ealle ætsomne, fāh in fyrnum (fyrlēoma stōd geond þæt atole scræf ættre geblonden) 130 'Ic eom limwæstmum þæt ic gelūtian n on þyssum sīdan sele, Hwæt! hēr hāt and ceald synnum forwunde hwīlum ic gehēre hellescealcas, hwīlum menc gnornende cynn, grundas mǣnan 135 niðer under næssum; hwīlum is þes win[d]að ymb wyrmas: nacode me eall inneweard atole gefylled. windiga se
'Ne mōt ic hihtlicran hāmes brūcan, burga nē bolda, nē on þā beorhtan gescæft 140 ne mōt ic ǣfre mā ēagum starian.
Is mē nū wyrsa þæt ic wuldres lēoht uppe mid englum ǣfre cūðe, song on swegle, þǣr Sunu Meotodes 123ª e of englum made from æ by erasure; Edd.

—123ᵇ J., T., B.¹, E., G.¹ þæs; W. þes.—124ᵇ First æ by erasure; Edd. except E. swægles.—125ª C. ihta wealdend over erasure; S.¹ thinks the second e of swegles f the word under wihta was clearly waldend.—125ᵇ scribe wrote the lette erasure; E., G.¹, Cs. me for him; C. gelamp.—1 c of ac from h b 216, which is the first page written by the second scribe. Swa begins page
wæstmum; G.¹ combines.—132ª J., T., B.¹, E., G.¹ Hwæðer; S.¹ lim
Hwæther; H.¹ Hwæt! her; G.¹ cald.—132ᵇ B.¹ me swencged.—130 G.¹ W.
E., G.¹, W. helle scealcas.—134 C., T., B.¹, G.¹ gnorniende.—136 MS.
Edd. winnað; T. n.: error for windað (?); C., T., B.¹, E., G.¹
ymbe.—141 C. alters a of wyrsa to æ; T., B.¹, W. wyrsa; E. wirse; G.¹ wyrse.

habbað ĕadige bearn   ealle ymbfangen

145   seolfa mid sange.   Nē ic þām sāwlum ne mōt [ðe of eorðan cumað]   ǣnigum sceððan būtan þām ānum   þe hē tō āgan nyle; þā ic mōt tō hæftum   hām geferian, bringan tō bolde   in þone biteran grund.

150   Ealle wē syndon   ungelīce þonne þe wē iū in heofonum   hæfdon ǣrror wlite and weorðmynt.   Ful oft wuldres [swĕg] brōhton tō bearme   bearn Hǣlendes, þǣr wē ymb hine ūtan   ealle hōfan,

155   leomu ymb Lēofne,   lofsonga word, Drihtne sǣdon.   Nū ic eom dǣdum fāh, gewundod mid wommum;   sceal nū þysne wites beoran beornende   in bæce mīnum,   [clom hāt on helle,   hyhtwillan lēas.'

160   Þā gȳt feola cwī[ð]de   firna herde, atol ǣglǣca,   ūt of helle, wītum wērig.   Word spearcum flēah ǣttre gelīcost,   þonne hē ūt þorhdrāf:
'Ealā Drihtenes þrym!   ealā duguða Helm!

165· ēalā Meotodes miht!   ealā middaneard!
ēalā dæg lēohta!   ēalā drēam Godes!

144ᵃ MS. eadigne; so J., T., B.¹, E., G.¹, W.; B.² habbeð eadige, bearn, ealle; Gz. eadge.—145 E., G.¹ seolfan; G.² seolfa.—146-7 T., B.² a hemistich missing after nyle; E. earmum atolum þe—nyle; G.² eadigra ænigum; G.², Gs. þara æfæstra ænigum; W. a hemistich missing before ænigum; Barnouw (Textkrit. Untersuch., p. 104) suggests þe up of eorðan cumað or þe up to eðle (earde) cumað, to fill gap in 146.—147ᵇ T., B.¹ toᴀɢaᴜ·; —152 G.¹, H.², K. wuldres sweg.—153ᵇ K. bearne (?).—155 B.¹ leoðu for leomu.—160 MS. cwide, herede; C. vel cwidum; J., T., B.¹, E., G.¹, W. cwide; Rieger, Lesebuch, G.¹, S.² (p. 456), Gz. cwiððe; Rieger heorde; G.², S.², Cs. herde (= hirde); Gz. hirde; B. (Glossary), E. herede (herian); D. harede. —163 C., T., B.¹, E., G.¹ þurh-.—166 o off leohta made from d; J. leohða; T., B.¹ dægleohta.

     ēalā engla þrēat!   ēalā ūpheofen!
     ēalā þæt ic eam ealles lēas   ēcan drēames, þæt ic mid handum ne mæg   heofon gerǣcan,

170   nē mid ēagum ne mōt   ūp lōcian, nē hūru mid ēarum ne sceal   ǣfre gehēran þǣre byrhtestan   bēman stefne;
     ðæs ic wolde of selde   Sunu Meotodes, Drihten ādrīfan,   and āgan mē þæs drēames gewald,

175   wuldres and wynne—   mē þǣr wyrse gelamp þonne ic tō hihte   āgan mōste.
     Nū ic eom āscēaden   fram þǣre scīran driht, ālǣded fram lēohte   in þone lāðan hām.
       'Ne mæg ic þæt gehicgan   hū ic in ðǣm becwōm, 180   in þis neowle genip,   [n]ī[ð]synnum fāh, āworpen of worulde.   Wāt ic nū þā þæt bið alles lēas   ēcan drēamas sē ðe Heofencyninge   hēran ne þenceð, Meotode cwēman.   Ic þæt morðer sceal

185   wēan and wītu   and wrace drēogan, gōda bedǣled,   iūdǣdum fāh, þæs ðe ic geþōhte ādrīfan   Drihten of selde, weoroda Waldend;   sceal nū wreclāstas settan sorhgceari,   sī[ð]as wīde.'

---

167 Edd. except W. upheofon.—170 C. ǵ (erased) after up.—172 byrhtestan begins p. 217; C. byman.—173 Gz., Wnrs.: a monosyllable lost before sunu.—175ᵇ G.¹ þæs (?); Rieger, Gz. þæs.—176ᵇ G.¹ ic ær; Br. þone þe.—176ᵇ H.¹, Gz. habban for MS. agan.—179ᵇ G.¹ n. þæm = þeam, vapor; Rieger in þone ðæm; D.: hof or ham lost (?); Gz. þæt ham (or in hæft); MS. w of becwom canceled (? by C.); Edd. becwom.—180 MS. mid synnum; B.¹, G.¹, Rieger, W., Gz. niðsynnum; T. gap of two hemistichs after genip; E. reads nearowe gebunden—genip / seoc and sorhfull mid—fah.—181ᵃ G.¹, Rieger, Gz. wuldre.—181ᵇ C., Edd. add ꝥ (þæt) after ic.—182ᵇ C. changes to ęcan dreamæs; W. accepts; J., T., B.¹, G.¹ dreames.—184 MS. morðre; T. n.: þæs morðres required (?); E. accepts þæs morðres; G.¹, W. þæs morðre; Rieger þæs morðer; K. þæt morðor. —189ᵃ C., Edd. add g to ceari.—189ᵇ MS. sidas; Edd. siðas.

[IV]

190   Hwearf þā tō helle þā hē gehēned wæs, Godes andsaca; dydon his gingran swā, gīfre and grǣdige, þā hē God bedrāf in þæt hāte hof þām is hel nama.
    Forþan sceal gehycgan hæleða ǣghwylc 195   þæt hē ne ābelige Bearn Waldendes; lǣte him tō bysne hū þā blācan fēond for oferhygdum ealle forwurdon.
    Neoman ūs tō wynne weoroda Drihten, up[p]e ēcne gefēan, engla Waldend.
200   Hē þæt gecȳdde þæt hē cræft hæfde, mihta miccle, þā hē þā mænego ādrāf, hæftas of ðǣm hēan selde. Gemunan wē þone hālgan Drihten;
203-204 ēcne mid al[l]a gescefta cēosan ūs eard in wuldre 205   mid ealra cyninga Cyninge, sē is Crīst genemned; beoran on brēostum blīðe geþōhtas, sibbe and snytero, gemunan sōð and riht, þonne wē tō hēhselde nīgan þencað, and þone Anwaldan āra biddan.
210   Þonne behōfað sē ðe hēr wunað

191 C. vel some; *G.*¹ swa some.—192 *C., T., B.¹, E., G.¹, W.* hig; J. hie.—195 e of abelige from æ by erasure; Edd. except E. abælige; B. abelge.—198 C. vel niman.—199 MS., Edd. upne.—200ᵃ *B.¹, E., G.¹, W.* gecyðde.—200ᵇ *MS., J., T., B.¹, W.* mægencræft; *E., G.¹, H.¹, Gs. omit* mægen.—202 Gs. heahan.—203-4 MS., Edd. ecne in wuldre mid alra; *B.*¹ wuldra; E. ecne in wuldre ealdor; heran we þone ælmihtigan / mid—gescæfta mænego; ceosan, etc. /; *B.*¹ (as 204ᵃ) eorðan ceosan; *B.¹, G.*¹ ordfruman ceosan; D. ealdre (or ealdor) ceosan (?); T. gap of a hemistich (W. a word) before ceosan; *H.*¹ or (or ord) ceosan (?); Gs., Kalusa (Eng. Stud. 21) print ecne in wuldre—wuldre as an expanded line.—205 *S.*¹ (12. 476), Cs. cyning for cyninge.—208 C. hnigan (h in margin); Edd. hnigan.—209ᵃ MS. þonne (first n partly erased); C. vel ealwaldan; *T., B.¹, E., G.*¹ alwaldan.—209ᵇ C. changes to aræ; Edd. ara.—210 se begins p. 218.

weorulde wynnum þæt him wlite scine þonne hĕ ŏŏer lîf eft gesĕceŏ; fǣg[e]re land, þonne þĕos folde sĕo, is wlitig and wynsum; wæstmas scînaŏ

215 beorhte ofer burgum. Þǣr is brâde lond, hyhtlîcra hâm in heofonrîce, Crîste gecwêmra. Uta cerran þider þǣr hĕ sylfa sit, sigora Waldend, Drihten Hǣlend, in ŏǣm dĕoran hâm;

220 and ymb þæt hĕhsetl hwîte standaŏ engla fêŏan and ĕadigre;
hâlige heofenþrĕatas herigaŏ Drihten wordum and weorcum. Heora wlite scîneŏ geond ealra worulda woruld mid Wuldorcyninḡ

V

225 Þâ gêt ic furŏor gefregen fĕond ondetan;
226-227 wæs him eall ful strang wom and wîtu. Hǣfd[ ] Wuldorcyning
for oferhîgdum ânforlǣten.
Cwæ[ŏ] eft hraŏe ôŏre worde:

---

211 B. weorulda; B. (Glossary) wlitescine.—213ª MS., J., T., [ fægre; C. ·s· (scilicet ?) mycele above fægre; T., B.¹ mycele fægrer[ B., G.¹, W. mycele fægerre; so S.¹ (p. 499); Gz. fægerre.—213ᵇ [ folde is /þær wlitig; T., B.¹ folde /seo is; G.¹, W. folde seo: /þ[ is.—214ª C. ·s· þær above is; Gz., Wnrs. omit þær is.—215 K. bradr[ —216 MS. n erased after hyhtlicra; J. hyhtlicran.—217ᵇ C. adds [ above ut, connects a by dashes with cerran on the next line of MS[ Edd. uton acerran.—220 C. adds e to ymb.—221 Edd. eadigra.—2[ MS. haligre, r erased; J. haligre.—224 H.¹ wuldorcyning.—225 ·[ in margin before þa; MS., J. feonda; T. feond (in note: f[ feondas) ; B.¹ feondas; G.¹ feonda bearn /; W. feonda . . ./; H[
Gz. feonda mænigu.—226ª G.¹ unriht ondetan; H.¹, Gz. yfel ondeta[
W. . . . ondetan; T., B.¹ gap of a hemistich after strang.—226ᵇ MS[
Edd. hæfdon.—229ª MS., Edd. cwædon.—229ᵇ C. vel ôŏrum wordu[ (so T., B.¹, G.¹, W.).

230 'Nû is gesêne þæt wê syngodon uppe on earde.   Sceolon nû ǣfre þæs drêogan dômlêase gewinn Drihtnes mihtum.
Hwæt! wê in wuldres wlite wunian môston, þǣr wê hâlgan Gode hêran woldon;

235 and him sang ymb seld secgan sceoldon þûsendmǣlum.   Þâ wê þǣr wǣron, wunodon on wynnum, gehêrdon wuldres swêg, bêman stefne.   Byrhtword ârâs engla Ordfruma, and þǣm Æþelan tô

240 hnigan him sanctas.   Sigetorht ârâs êce Drihten, ofer ûs gestôd, and geblêtsode bilewitne hêap dôgra gehwilcne, and his se dêora Sunu, gâsta Scyppend.   God seolfa wæs

245 eallum andfeng þe ðǣr ûp becôm, and hine on eorðan ǣr gelêfde.
    'Þâ ðæs ofþûhte þæt se Pêoden wæs strang and stîðmôd.   Ongan ic þâ steppan forð âna wið englum, and tô him eallum spræc:

250 "Ic can êow lǣran langsumne rǣd, gif gê willað mîre mihte gelêfan:
uta oferhycgan Helm þone micclan, weroda Waldend, âgan ûs þis wuldres lêoht

230 C. adds ge before syngodon; T., B.¹, G.¹, W. gesyngodon.—232 S.² (12. 467) domleas; Gz.: omit gewinn.—233 C. in after we (above line); T., B.¹, G.¹, W. we in.—236ᵃ T. gap of a hemistich before þusend-; B.¹, G.¹ þegnas ymb þeoden þusendmælum /; W. . . . . . . þusendmælum.—236ᵇ MS. þær wunodon; C. wæron above line after þær; J., T., B.¹, G.¹ omit wæron; B.¹, G.¹ þa we þær wunodon—sweg (for 237).—238 B.¹ byrht weard; Cs. burgweard.—239ᵇ MS., Edd. and to þæm æþelan; H.¹, Gz. as in text.—240ᵃ MS. scâs.—243 Cs. gehwilce.—245 Cs. andfenge or andfengea.—246 C. gelyfde.—247 G.¹, W. þa me.—250 eow begins p. 219.—251ᵇ w erased after gif; C., Edd. minre (n possibly by scribe).—251ᵇ Scribe cancels a of MS. mihta, writes e above it; J. mihta.—252ᵃ C., Edd. utan.

eall tō ǣhte." Þis is īdel gylp 255 þæt wē ǣr drugon ealle hwīle.

VI

'Ðā gewearð ūsic þæt wē woldon swā Drihten ādrīfan of þām dēoran hām, Cyning of cestre. Cūð is wīde þæt wreclāstas wunian mōton, 260 grimme grundas. God seolfa him 260 A rīce haldeð; hē is āna [riht] Cyning, þe ūs eorre gewearð, ēce Drihten, Meotod mihtum swilc.
          'Sceal nū þēos menego hēr licgan on leahtrum, sume on lyft scacan, flēogan ofer foldan— fȳr bið ymbūtan 265 on ǣghwylcum, þēh hē uppe sēo.
Nē mōt hē þām sāwlum þe ðǣr sēcað ūp ēadige of eorþan ǣfre gerīnan;
ah ic be hondum mōt hǣþenre sceal[e] grīpan tō grunde, Godes andsacan.
270 Sume sceolon hweorfan geond hæleða land and unsibbe oft onstyrian monna mǣgðum geond middaneard.
Ic hēr geþolian sceal þinga ǣghwylces

---

256 MS. þ in margin as indication for capital.—259 G.[1], W. þæt we.—260-1 MS., J., T., B.[1], G.[1], W. he is ana cyning; G.[1], W. grimme—haldeð as one line; S.[2] (12. 477) assumes gap of 2 hemistichs after haldeð; as another possible arrangement, S.[2] omits ece drihten and prints as one line he—gewearð /; Gs. rice—cyning (= 260A) with riht for ana; Cs. he is an riht cyning; G.[1], W. he is—drihten /; T., B.[1] give 260-261 as in MS.—262 B.[1], D., G.[1], W. mihtum swið.—263 C.
sceacan.—265 B.[1], G.[1] þeah.—266 G.[1] mot ic.—267 C., Edd. gehrinan.— 268 MS. sceal; T. n.: perhaps hæþene scealcas; B.[1], G.[2], W. hæðenne scealc; G.[1] hondum mæg hæþenra sceal.—273 Gs. þinga æghwilc or gehwylces.

(in ðǽ[m] bitr[an bryne]   beala gnornian, 275   sīc and sorhful)   þæs ic seolfa wēold, þonne ic on heofonum   hām staðelode.
Hwæðer ūs se Ēca   ǽfre wille on heofona rīce   hām ālēfan, ēðel tō ǽhte,   swā hē ǽr dyde?' 280   Swā gnorned[e]   Godes andsaca, hāt on helle.   Him wæs Hǽlend God wrāð geworden   for womcwidum.
Forþon mæg gehycgan   sē ðe his heorte dēah, þæt hē him āfirre   frēcne geþōhtas, 285   lāðe leahtras,   lifigendra gehwylc.
Gemunan symle on mōde   Meotodes strengðo; gearwian ūs tōgēnes   grēne strǽte ūp tō englum,   þǽr is se ælmihtiga God.
And ūs befæðman wile   Frēobearn Godes, 290   gif wē þæt on eorðan   ǽr geþencað, and ūs tō þām Hālgan   helpe gelēfað;
þonne hē ūs nō forlǽteð,   ah līf syleð uppe mid englum,   ēadigne drēam.
Tǽceð ūs se Torhta   trumlicne hām, 295   beorhte burhweallas;   beorhte scīnað gesǽlige sāwle,   sorgum bedǽlde,

---

274 MS., J. bitres in ðæs beala; T., B.¹ as MS.; they print bitre—gnornian as one hemistich with gap of a hemistich thereafter; T. n.: perhaps bitre in þas bealu; G.¹ bitre in þæs brynes beala; W. ðæs . . .
beala; H.¹, Gs. bitre in ðæs brandes; Trautmann in Wms. bæles beala.—275 C. seoc (by changing i to e and writing o above); *Edd.
except J.* seoc.—278 Gs. heofonrice.—279 MS., J., T. eðle; T. n.: error for eðel; B.¹, G.¹, W. eðel.—280 MS., Edd. gnornedon, and-sacan.—281 MS., Edd. hate.—287 Gs. (Metrik) gierwan.—288 Gs.
omits god.—291 MS. gelefað; scribe cancels a and writes e above it; Edd. gelefað.—294 torhta begins þ. 220.—295 Rieger (*Zs. f. D. Ph.
7. 18*) thinks the line corrupt; H. (Eng. Stud. 37. 205) blāce for first beorhte.

þǣr hēo [wide]f[e]rð wunian mōten cestre and cynestōl. Uton cȳþan þæt!
dēman wē on eorðan ǣrror lifigend!

300   Onlūcan mid listum locen Waldendes, ongeotan gāstlice: ūs ongēan cumað þūsend engla, gif þider mōton, and þæt on eorðan ǣr gewyrcað.
Forþon sē bið ēadig se ðe ǣfre wile

305   mān oferhycgen, Meotode cwēman, synne ādwǣscan; swā hē sylfa cwæð:
'Sōðfæste men, sunnan gelīce, fǣgre gefrætewod, in heora Fæder rīce scīnað in sceldbyrig.'   Þǣr Sceppend seolf

310   hēo befæðmeð, Fæder mancynnes, āhefeð holdlice in heofones lēoht, þǣr hēo mid Wuldorcyninge wunian mōton,

314   āgan drēama drēam mid Drihtne Gode,

315   āwa tō aldre, ā būton ende.

[VII]

Ēalā hwæt se āwyrgda wrāðe geþōhte þæt hē Heofencyninge hēran ne wolde, Fæder frēfergendum. Flōr āttre wēol, hât under hæftum;   hrēo[p]an dēofla, 320   wīde geond windsele   wēa cwänedon, mân and morður: wæs ðǣr[e] menego þǣr swylce onǣled;   wæs þæt eall full strong.

            Þonne wæs heora aldor,   þe ðǣr ǣrest cōm forð on fēþan,   fæste gebunden 325   fŷre and līge;   þæt wæs fæstlic þrēat.
            Ēc sceoldon his þegnas   þǣr gewunian atolan ēðles, · nalles ûp þanon gehēran in heofonum   hâligne drēam, þǣr hēo oft fægerne   folgað hæfdon 330   uppe mid englum.   Wǣron þā alles þæs, gôda, lēase;   ah nymþe gryndes [âd] wunian [ne] môten   and þone wērigan sele, þǣr is wôm and wôp   wīde gehēred, and gristbitung[c]   and gnornung[c] mecga.
335   Nabbað [h]ē tō hyhte   nymþe [hât] and cyle, wēan and wītu   and wyrma þrēat, dracan and nǣddran,   and þone dimman hâm.
            Forðon mihte gehēran   sē ðe æt hylle wæs twelf mīlum nēh   þæt ðǣr wæs tôða gehēaw,

319 MS., J., T., B.¹, G.¹ hreowan; G.², W., K. hreopan; G.² deoflu.—320ᵃ Scribe adds d of windsele above; J. winsele.—320ᵇ T., B.¹, G.¹, W. wea-cwanedon; H.² wea cw-; K. wean.—321 MS. ðær; T. n.: ðær apparently error for seo; B.¹ seo; G.¹, W., K. ðære.—322ᵃ G.¹, W. swyðe.—322ᵇ B.² æled for eall.—324 J. prints fætse, but corrects in Errata.—325 G.¹ n. þrea (?), þræd (?).—326ᵃ Gr., Wwrs. sceoldon ec; B. translates ec 'ewig.'—331 MS., J. leas; C., other Edd. lease; B.² (p. CCXXXIV) thinks goda stands for godan.—331ᵇ MS. ah nymþe gryndes; C. underlines (cancels?) ah; K. omits; G.¹ gryndes bealu; W. n. grynde or grundas possible; K. grundas an.—332 T., B.¹, G.¹, W. ne moten.—334 MS., J., T., B.¹, G.¹, W., Gr. gristbitunge and gnornunge; H.² gristbitung and gnornung; Gr. omits first and and mecga; Cs. as in text; T. n.: several ll. wanting after mecga.—335ᵃ MS., J., T., B.¹ we; B.², G.¹, W. hie for we.—335ᵇ MS., J., T., B.¹, G.¹, W. cycle and fyr; Gr. hat and cald; em. Cs.—336 þreat begins p. 221.

340 lûde and gêomre. Godes andsacan hweorfan geond helle hâte onǽled ufan and ûtan   (him wæs ǽghwǽr wâ), wîtum wêrige, wuldres bescyrede, drêamum bedǽlde.   Hêofon dêop gehygd,

345 þâ hêo on heofonum hâm staðelodon, þæt hîe woldon benǽman nergendne Crîst rodera rîces. Ah hê on riht gehêold hîred heofona and þæt hâlige seld.
      Nis nǽnig swâ snotor nê swâ cræftig

350 nê þæs swâ glêaw nymþe God seolfa þæt âsecgan mæge swegles lêoman, hû [scîma] þǽr scîneð ymbûtan Meotodes mihte geond þæt mǽre cynn (þǽr habbað englas êadigne drêam, 355 sanctas singað): þæt is se seolfa God.

Þonne bêoð þâ êadigan þe of eorðan cumað, bringað tô bearme blôstman stences, wyrta wynsume, þæt synd word Godes.
Þonne hîe befæðmeð Fæder mancynnes,

360 and hîe gesegnað mid his swîðran hond; lǽdað tô lîhte, þǽr hî lîf âgon â tô aldre, ûplicne hâm, byrhtne burhstyde.   Blǽd bið ǽghwǽm 340 C., Edd. hlude; H. (Eng. Stud. 37. 205; see Rieger, Zs. f. D.

Ph. 7. 29) geomre and hlude.—341 J. hweorfon.—346 J. nergende.—
349ᵃ Gs. (Metrik) nis nan.—349ᵇ G.¹ sundorcræftig; H.¹, Gs. searocræftig.—350 Gs. gleaw and wis.—352 MS., J., T., B.¹ hu sunnu; T. n.: error for sunne; G.¹ hu scir sunnu; W. hu . . . sunnu; H.¹, Gs.
scima for sunnu; Cs. hu scir sunna (or sunu?).—355 MS. se erased before seolfa; MS., J., T., B.¹, G.¹, W. seolfa for god; H.¹: omit for (?); H. (Eng. Stud. 51. 181) for seolfan gode.—356 T. n.: considerable hiatus after cumað.—357 G.¹ stencas (?).—358 Scribe makes a of wyrta from e; Edd. wyrte.—361 C. alters to lǽdæð; T., W.
lǽdæð; G.¹ lǽdeð.—363ᵃ C., T., B.¹, G.¹ beorhtne, -stede.

þǣm ðe Hǣlende hēran þenceð,

365 and wel is þām ðe þæt [wyrcan] mōt.

[VIII]

Wæs þæt encgelcyn ǣr genemned Lūcifer hāten, 'Lēohtberende,' on gēardagum in Godes rīce.
Þā hē in wuldre wrōht onstalde,
370 þæt hē oferhȳda āgan wolde. 5 [Þā] Sātānus swearte geþōhte þæt hē wolde on heofonum hēhseld wyrcan uppe mid þām Ēcan. (Þæt wæs ealdor heora, yfeles ordfruma.) Him þæt eft gehrēaw 375 þā hē tō helle hnīgan sceolde, 10 and his hīred mid hine [in] in[ð]o geglīdan, Nergendes nīð; and nō seoððan þæt hī mōsten in þone ēcan andwlitan [sēon] būton ende.
Þā him egsa becōm,
380 dyne for Dēman, þā hē duru in helle 15
bræc and bēgde. Blis wearð monnum

364 C. hyran.—365 MS., Edd. ðe þæt mot; D. wyrcan mot (?); H.¹ mot fon; Gs. omits 365.—366 W. before 366 prints the title:
Christi Höllenfahrt, Auferstehung, Himmelfahrt, und Kommen zum
Jüngsten Gericht; T. n.: gap after genemned.—369 C., T., B.¹, E., G.¹ add e to wroht; C. onstealde.—370 Cs. for oferhyde agan (or eawan or æfnan?) wolde.—371ª MS., J., T., B.¹, E., G.¹, W. omit þa; H.¹ Satanus seolf; Gs. þær Satanus; Br. þa, þæt, or se Satanus.—
371ᵇ T. gesohte; B.¹ gesohte—wolde /; E. sw. searwum geþohte.— 373 E. wið.—374 MS. ordfruman; Edd. ordfruma.—376ᵇ MS. into geglidan; E. in to henðo; G.¹, W. in to g.; Gs. (Metrik) heonon to g.; Cs. him to gesiðum; K. in hatunge geglidan; H. (Anglia Bb.
30. 4) in hete geglidan or glidan.—377ª Cs. in þæt nearwe nið.—377ᵇ D. wæs siððan.—378 T. n.: andwlitan error for onwlitan; E. and-wlitan sceawian; H.¹ andwlitan seon; Gs. (Metrik) eagum wlitan; Br. transposes thus: andwlitan mosten.—379 E., G.¹, Cs. a buton.— 380 Gs. omits in.

þā hī Hǣlendes hēafod gesāwon.
Þonne wæs þām atolan þe wē ǣr nemdon

385 þā wǣron mid egsan ealle āfyrhte,   20 wide geond windsele wordum mǣndon:
'Þis is stronglic nū þes storm becōm, Þegen mid þrēate, Þēoden engla.
Him beforan fēreð fǣgere lēoht

390 þonne wē ǣfre ǣr ēagum gesāwon,   25 būton þā wē mid englum uppe wǣron.
Wile nū ūre wītu þurh his wuldres cræft eall tōweorpan.   Nū ðes egsa cōm, dyne for Drihtne, sceal þes drēorga hēap

395 ungēara nū atol þrōwian.   30 Hit is se seolfa Sunu Waldendes, engla Drihten.   Wile uppe heonan sāwla lǣdan, and wē seoððan ā þæs [he] reweorces hēnðo geþoliað.'

400   Hwearf þā tō helle hæleða bearnum,   35 Meotod þurh mihte; wolde manna rīm, fela þūsenda, forð gelǣdan ūp tō ēðle.   Þā cōm engla swēg, dyne on dægrēd: hæfde Drihten seolf

405 fēond oferfohten. Wæs sēo fǣhðe þā gȳt   40 open on ūhtan, þā se egsa becōm.

---

382 gesawon begins p. 222; J. he.—383 T. n.: gap *of several ll.
after* 383; B.¹, W. gap of one line; E. supplies as 384 fagum folce forht geworden; G.¹ fagum folce ferhð geaclod.—385 Gs. (Metrik), Wrs. wǣron þa.—386 MS., J. winsele; C., other Edd. windsele.—
387ª E. stronglic strið.—387ᵇ B.¹ styrne for storm.—389 MS., J., W.
fæger; C., T., B.¹ add e to fæger; E., G.¹, S.¹, H.², Gs. fægerre.—
397 G.¹, Gs. up. —399ª MS., J., T., E., G.¹, W., H.² yrreweorces; B.¹
yrre weorces; Gs. herweorces; Clark Hall yrreðweorh.—399ᵇ E. n. earfoðu for henðo; H.² ermðo for henðo.—400 Scribe adds to above line.

Lēt þā ūp faran   ēadige sāwle, Ādāmes cyn.
        And ne mōste Ēfe þā gȳt wlītan in wuldre   ǣr hēo wordum cwæð:

410 'Ic þē ǣne ābealh,   ēce Drihten,   45 þā wit Ādām twā   eaples þigdon þurh nǣddran nīð,   swā wit nā ne sceoldon.
Gelǣrde unc se atola,   sē ðe ǣfre nū beorneð on bendum,   þæt wit blǣd āhton,

415 hāligne hām,   heofon tō gewalde.   50
Þā wit ðæs āwærgdan   wordum gelȳfdon; nāmon mid handum   on þām hālgan trēo beorhte blǣda—   unc þæs bitere forgeald þā wit in þis hāte scræf   hweorfan sceoldon,

420 and wintra rīm   wunian seoððan,   55 þūsenda feolo,   þearle onǣled.

    'Nū ic þē hālsige,   heofenrīces Weard, for þān hīrede   þe ðū hider lǣddest, engla þrēatas,   þæt ic ūp heonon

425 mǣge and mōte   mid mīnre mǣgðe.   60
And ymb þrēo niht cōm   þegen Hǣlendes hām tō helle;   is nū hæftum strong, wītum wērig,   swylce him Wuldorcyning for onmǣdlan   eorre geworden.

407ᵃ T., B.¹, W. upfaran; G.¹ hyphenates.—407ᵇ C. (possibly scribe) alters e of sawle to a; E. sawla.—408 efe produced (? by C.) by altering æfre; T. n.: context requires ac for and; B.¹, E. ac.—409ᵃ T. n.: wuldre apparently error for wulder; B.¹ wulder; B., G.¹ wuldor; G.¹ wuldre.—409ᵇ heo formed by addition of o to he (? by C.; S.¹ thinks by scribe).—412 J. nane; Gs., Wnrs. omit ne.—414 E. ahten.—415 J., B.¹ misread gewealde.—421 H.¹ onælde.—423 E., G.¹ þam.—425 T. n.: considerable gap after mægðe (so B.¹); E. mægðe feran followed by a gap; Gs.: fare for mægðe or gap.—426 G.¹ n.: end (suvor) for and (?).—427 T. gap of 2 hemistichs after helle.—428 Gs. wuldrcyning.—429 T., E. gap after 429.

430   Segdest ûs tô sôðe þætte seolfa God   65 wolde helwarum hâm gelîhtan.
      Ârâs þâ ânra gehwylc, and wið earm gesæt, hleonade wið handa; þeah hylle gryre egeslic þûhte, wæron ealle þæs 435   fægen in firnum þæt [Frêo]drihten   70 wolde him tô helpe helle gesêcan.' Rǣhte þâ mid handum tô Heofencyninge, bæd Meotod miltse þurh Marian hâd:
      'Hwæt! þû fram mîre dohtor, Drihten, onwôce 440   in middangeard mannum tô helpe.   75 Nû is gesêne þæt ðû eart sylfa God, êce Ordfruma ealra gesceafta.'

[IX]

      Lêt þâ ûp faran êce Drihten—wuldre hæfde wîtes clomma 445   fêondum oðfæsted, and hêo furðor scêaf   80 in þæt neowle genip, nearwe gebêged, þǣr nû Sâtânus swearte þingað, earm âglǣca, and þâ atolan mid him, wîtum wêrige. Nalles wuldres lêoht

---

430 E. hætte, misprint for þætte; E. n. sægde (?); G.[1] n. segde.—431[a] G.[1] n. helwarena (?); 431[b] B.[2] gelifan.—432 sæt begins p. 223; J. earmge-rec (this misreading was due to wrinkle in the parchment).—433 B.[1] hyllegryre.—435[a] T. gap of 2 hemistichs after firnum; E., H.[2] fægene.—435[b] MS., J., T., W. þæt heora drihten; E. freadrihten; B.[1], H.[1], Gs. freodrihten; G.[1] feora drihten.—436 G.[1] ham for helle; E. gap after 436.—437 MS. rihte; C. cancels i, writes æ above; Edd. ræhte; B.[2] hand.—439 J., T., B.[1], E., G.[1], W. minre; B. dehter.—441 A second god written and canceled.—442[a] 7 crased before ece; J. 7 ece.—442[b] J., T., B.[1], E. gescafta.—443 J., T., B.[1], E., W. upfaran.—444[a] E. n. wuldor (?); B.[2] wuldre hæftas; G.[1] werud to wuldre; W. . . . . wuldre.—444[b] T. n.: clomma apparently error for clommas; B.[1], E., G.[1], W. clommas; G.[2] clomma; S.[2] (p. 514), Gs. hæfde wites clom; Hofer (Dat. u. Instrum., p. 22) clom mâ.—445 B.[2] on fæstede.—447 E. swearta.

450 habban môton, ah in helle grund;   85 nê hî edcerres æfre môton wênan.
     Seoððan him wæs Drihten wrâð geworden, sealde him wîtes clom,
454 atol tô æhte and egsan gryre, 455 dim[n]e and deorcne dêaðes scuwan,   90 hâtne helle grund, insîðgryre.
          Þæt, lâ! wæs fæger þæt se fêða côm ûp tô earde, and se Eca mid him, Meotod mancynnes, in þâ mæran burh.
460 Hôfon hine mid him handum hâlige   95
     wîtigan ûp tô êðle, Abrahames cynn.
     Hæfde þâ Drihten seolf dêað oferwunnen, fêond geflêmed; þæt in fyrndagum wîtegan sædon þæt hê swâ, lâ, wolde.
465 Þis wæs on ûhtan eall geworden,   100 ær dægrêde, þæt se dyne becôm, hlûd of heofonum, þâ hê helle duru forbræc and forbêgde; bân weornodon

450 T., E. gap of one l. after grund; B.¹ grund . . .; E. grunde.— 451 E. moton æfre; D., H.³ omit wenan; Gs. (Metrik) omits hi and wenan.—452 MS., Edd. drihten god; T. gap of a hemistich after god; Edd. print seoððan—clom as 2 ll.; B.¹ god * * (W. . . .); E. drihten god dugeða aldor; D. wenan seoððan; G.¹ d. g. deofla cynne; H.³ domes (or dreames) wenan (as 452ª); E. clommas.—454 MS., Edd. atole; G.¹ atolne (?).—455ª MS., J., T. dimme; T. n.: apparently error for dimne; B.¹, E., G.¹, W. dimne.—455ᵇ Trautmann in Wnrs.
sceadwa for scuwan.—456ª B.¹ hellegrund.—456ᵇ T., B.¹ hinsîð gryre; E. hinsîðes; G.¹, W. hinsîðgryrre.—457ª G.¹ þæt wæs lâ.—457ª T. n.: þæt seems to be an error for þa.—460ª E., H.¹, Gs., Wnrs. omit him; E., G.¹ halige witigan /; B.¹ on handum.—463ª 4 or more letters erased after feond; ge of geflemed added in margin.—464 MS. sawla; T. gap of one l. after wolde; B.¹ wolde . . .; E. adds a line: fram helle grundum ham gelædan; B.¹ swa for sawla; G.¹, W. swa lâ; Ziegler (Poetische Sprachgebr., p. 160) would add: fela þusenda forð gelædan (cf. 402), or helle hæftas ham gelædan; Gs. wolde swa.—467 B.¹ helleduru.—468 T. n.: perhaps bendas; G.¹ banan.

þā hīe swā lēohtne   lēoman gesāwon.

470   Gesæt þā mid þǣre fyrde Frumbearn Godes; 10 sǣde sōðcwidum: 'Snotre gāstas, ic ēow þurh mīne   mihte geworhte, Ādām ǣrest and þæt æðele wīf.
(Þā hīe begēton   on Godes willan

475   fēowertig bearna,   þæt forð þonon [on] middangeard menio onwōcon; 110 and wintra feola   wunian mōston eorlas on ēðle,   oððæt eft gelamp

479   þæt hē āfyr[d]e fēond in firenum— fāh is æghwǣr.)

481   'Ic on neorxnawonge   nīwe āsette trēow mid telgum, þæt ðā tānas ūp 116 æpla bǣron;   and git ǣton þā beorhtan blǣda, swā inc se balewa hēt,

485   handþegen helle. Hæfdon forþon hātne grund, 120 þæs git ofer[h]ygdon Hǣlendes word:
ǣten þā egsan. Wæs se atola beforan, sē inc bām forgeaf balewe geþōhtas.

'Þā mē gerēaw   þæt mīn handgeweorc

476ᵃ A later hand has added e to middangeard; T. n.: error for middangearde; B.¹ geond midd-; E. on middangearde; G.¹, Klaeber (Later Genesis) on middangeard; W., Gₛ. middangearde.—476ᵇ MS., J., T., G.¹ onweocon; the MS. has a dot under e of onweocon (? by scribe); E., W. onwocon.—478 T. gap of 3 hemistichs after gelamp.—479 MS., J., T. afyrhte eft; B. * * * þæt—eft /; E. gap of a hemistich after eft; E. n. þæt hie afyrrode eft se feorh-sceaða; B.⁸ afirrde eft; D. afyrde est; G.¹ þæt þe (G.⁸ þæt he) afyrde freo-drihtnes est; W. afyrde . . . est; Klaeber (JEGP. 12. 257) afyrde foldbuendum.—480 Edd. feond—æghwær.—481 Gₛ., Wₙᵣₛ. -wong.—483 æpla begins p. 224; MS. bæron 7 blurred; G.¹ æplas—þa/.—484 G.¹ þa beorhtan.—486 MS., J., T., W. ofergymdon; T. n., Klaeber (Later Gen.) oferhygdon; B.¹, E., G.¹, Gₛ. oferhyrdon.—488 inc blurred.—489ᵃ D., G.¹ gehreaw; E. hearde gereaw; Gₛ. hearde or æt heortan gehreaw.—489ᵇ g of handgeweorc either erased or blurred; T. gap of a hemistich after -weorc; B.¹ handweorc * *.

490   [þæs] carcernes clom ðrōwade.   125
       Næs ðā monna gemet, nē mægen engla, nē wītegena weorc, nē wera snytero, þæt ēow mihte helpan, nimðe Hǣlend God, sē þæt wīte ǣr tō wrece gesette.
495   Fērde tō foldan þurh fǣmnan hād   130 ufan from ēðle, and on eorþan gebād tintregan fela and tēonan micelne.
       Mē seredon ymb secgas monige dæges and nihtes, hū hēo mē dēaðes cwealm, 500   rīces [rǣd]boran, hrefnan mihten.   135 Þā wæs þæs mǣles mearc āgangen þæt on worulde wæs wintra gerīmes þrēo and þrītig gēara ǣr ic þrōwode.
       Gemunde ic ðǣs mænego [on] þā[m] minnan hām 505   lange þæs ðe ic of hæftum hām gelǣdde   140 ūp tō earde, þæt hēo āgan [sceolon]
       Drihtnes dōmas and duguðe þrym;

490 MS. om. þæs; T., B.[1] print 490 as one hemistich (omitting þæs), with gap of a hemistich thereafter; E. þæs carcernes clommas; G.[1], W. leave no gap; S.[2] (p. 514): a weak syllable to be supplied in 490[a] or a stressed syllable in 490[b] (i. e., before ðrōwade); H.[1] cwealm ðrōwade; Cs. cealdan or cealdne or þises clom; em. Gs.—491 E. n. gemot (?).—492[a] G.[1] witgena word.—492[b] J., E. snytro.—494 Gs. sette.—497 MS., J. tintregan and fela; T., B.[1], E., G.[1], W. as in text; S.[2] (p. 514) tintregan fela ond fela teonan; H.[2] tintregan micelne and teona fela; Gs. omits and (order as in MS.); Br. tintregan and teonan micelne (??).—500[a] MS., J., T., B.[1], E., G.[1], W. rices boran; D. rice ræsboran (?); S.[2] (p. 454), H.[2], Gs. rædboran.—500[b] E., Gs. ræfnan; D. refnan; G.[1] arefnan; H.[2] refnan leten.—502 Cs. þæt ic.—503 þreo blurred; Gs., Cs. omit geara.—504[a] G.[1] þas; G.[2] þæs.—504[b] MS. 7 þa minan ham; C. minnan; J., T., B.[1], E., G.[1], W. and þa minan ham lange /; T. n.: lange possibly error for lædde; E. þa minnan ham lange /; D. understands þæt after MS. þa; G.[1] n.: perhaps ham should be canceled; H.[2] þæt mæl lange; Gs. in þam minnan ham (omits lange).—505 E. hie ham; H.[2] heo of.—506 earde blurred; E. agan þær; G.[1] agan moton; W. agan . . .; H.[2], Gs., Wärs. agan sculon.

wuniað in wynnum,   habbað wuldres blæd þūsendmǣlum.   Ic ēow þingade, 510 þā mē on bēame beornas sticedon,   145 gārum on galg[an].   Hēow se giunga þǣr, and ic eft ūp becōm,   ēce drēamas tō hāligum Drihtne.   . . . . . .

[X]

Swā wuldres Weard   wordum sǣde, 515 Meotod moncynnes,   on morgen ǣr,   150
þæs þe Drihten God   of dēaðe ārās.
Næs nān þæs stronglic   stān gefæstnod, þēah hē wǣre mid īrne   eall ymbfangen, þæt mihte þām miclan   mægne wiðhabban, 520 ah hē ūt ēode,   engla Drihten,   155 on þǣm fæstenne.   And gefatian hēt englas eallbeorhte   andleofan gingran; and hūru secgan hēt   Sīmon Pētre þæt hē mōste in Galilēam   God scēawian, 525 ēcne and trumne,   swā hē ǣr dyde.   160
Þā ic gongan gefregn   gingran ætsomne

---

508 *J., T., B.*¹ wuldræs; E. wunjað nu in.—511 MS., Edd. galgum;
C. gealgum.—512 E. becom to eðle minum /; *B.*¹ upbecom /; *H.*² ece on dreamas (?).—513 *B.*¹, E. ece—drihtne /; *G.*¹ drihtne in heofon-rice /; W. drihtne . . .; Gs. to . . . haligum drihtne.—514 Capital omitted; s in margin.—515 MS., Edd. ær on morgen; *em. H. (Eng.
Stud. 37. 205).*—516 Scribe adds þe above line.—517ᵃ *G.*¹ na; *G.*ˢ nan.— 517ᵇ *MS., J., T., B.*¹ satan; *G.*¹, W. stan.—518 J. þea.—520 C. cancels
h of ah, adds c above; Edd. except J. ac; *B.*¹ uteode.—521ᵃ on *blurred; D., G.*¹, W. of for on.—521ᵇ C. alters to gefætian; *J., T., B.*¹, *G.*¹, W. gefætian; D. gefetian.—522 *T., B.*¹ -beorhte * * */; MS.
gingran winum (gingran blurred); so J.; D. and eowan (or æteowan) gingran sinum; *G.*¹ ændleofan gingran sinum; *G.*ˢ andleofan; W. andleofan g. sinum; *H.*², Gs., Cs. omit winum; T. and leofan gingran winum . . . . . .; *B.*¹ and leofan g. winum georne /.—524 moste in blurred.—525 J. trumme.—526 dyde þa ic go much blurred; J. gefrægn.

ealle tō Galilēam;   hæfdon gāstes blēd,
. . . . . . hāligne Godes Sunu swā hēo gesēgon,   hwær Sunu Meotodes 530 þā on upp [ge]stōd,   ēce Drihten,   165
God in Galilēam.   Tō ðæs gingran þider ealle urnon,   þær se Ēca wæs.
Fēollon on foldan,   tō fōtum hnigon;
þanceden Þēodne   þæt hit þus gelomp 535 þæt hī scēawodon   Scyppend engla.   170 Þā sōna spræc Sīmon Pētrus:
'Eart þū þis, Drihten,   dōme gewurðad?
Wē ðē gesāwon   æt sumum cyrre:
þec gelegdon   on lāðne bend 540 hæþene mid hondum;   him þæt gehrēowan mæg, 175 þonne hēo endestæf   eft gescēawiað.' Sume hīe ne mihton   mōd oncnāwan þæt wæs se Dēora   —Didimus wæs hāten—ær hē mid hondum   Hǣlend genōm 545 sylfne be sīdan,   þær hē his swāt forlēt   180 (fēollon tō foldan   fulwihtes bæðe).
Fǣger wæs þæt ongin,   þæt Frēodrihten

527 J. blæd.—528 T., B.¹, W. gap of a hemistich before haligne; G.¹ ongeton haligne—sunu /.—530 MS., J., T., B.¹, W. þa gingran on upp stod; gingran begins p. 225; G.¹, H.¹, Gs. omit þa gingran; H.¹ cwic on upp stod, or on upp gestod (Gs. accepts latter); Cs. þa up astod or þær on upp astod.—531 ðæs blurred; J. omits to.—533 Edd. and to fotum, the ﹖ in MS., if it was ever there, is now wholly unrecognizable, what looks like the lateral stroke at the top of the symbol ﹖ was probably produced by the smearing of the metrical point.—534 J., G¹ þancedon; MS. ﹖ hit canceled after þæt hit.— 537 J. misreads gewurðað; T. þus for þis.—538 A smear in the MS. after sum probably obscures ū (um), Edd. sumum; W. misprints gasawon.—539 c of þec canceled; Gs. hu or hwær þec; Br. places cæsura after on and reads laðe or laðan benda.—540 MS., J., T., B.¹ hæðenne; em. G.¹—541 Gs., Wnrs. sceawiað.—542ᵃ B.¹, G.¹, W. sume hit.—542ᵇ T., B.¹, H.¹ mode; T. gap of 2 ll. after oncnawan; G.¹ soð oncnawan.—546 G.¹, W. feallan; G.¹, W., Gs. (Metrik) bæð.

geþröwode,   Þēoden ūre:
hē on bēame āstāh   and his blōd āgēat,
550 God on galgan,   þurh his gāstes mægen.   18 Forþon men sceolon   mæla gehwylce secgan Drihtne þanc   dædum and weorcum, þæs ðe hē ūs of hæftum   hām gelædde ūp tō ēðle,   þær wē āgan [sceolon] 555 Drihtnes dōmas   [and duguðe þrym],   190 and wē in wynnum wunian mōton.   Ūs is wuldres lēoht
torht ontȳned,   þām ðe teala þenceð.

                              [XI]

      [Þ]ā wæs on eorðan   ēce Drihten folgad folcum   fēowertig daga, 560 gecȳðed mancynne,   ær hē in þā mæran gesceaft,   19 burhlēoda Fruma,   bringan wolde hāligne gāst   tō heofonrīce.
Āstāh ūp on heofonum   engla Scyppend, weoroda Waldend.   Þā cōm wolcna swēg, 565 hālig of heofonum.   Mid wæs hond Godes,   200 onfēng Frēodrihten,   and hine forð lædde

---

550 C. gealgan.—552 ne of drihtne blurred; D., G.[1], W. wordum.—
554 G.[1] agan moton; W. agan . . .; H.[1], Gs. agan sculon.—555 T., S.[2] (12. 477) gap of a hemistich after domas; B.[1], G.[1], W., H.[1] as in text.—556 T. prints as 3 hemistichs; B.[1], G.[1], W. as in text; S.[2] (*12.
477*) gap of a hemistich after wynnum, wunian—leoht as separate line; Gs. reads 556 thus: wunian in wynnum us is wuldres leoht /.— 557 The remaining 5/8 of þ. 225 after þenceð contains an unfinished ornamental design. Space is left at the beginning of þ. 226 for a capital.—559 MS., J., T., B.[1], G.[1], W. feowertig daga folgad folcum; G.[1] n.: beide Vershälften zu vertauschen? Gs. transposes; Cs. omits folgad, reads folcum gecyðed /; K. folcum gecyðed, / mancynne folgad.—560 MS., J., T., B.[1], W. mancynnes; G.[1], H.[1], Gs. mancynne; Cs. meotod mancynnes.—563 Gs. halig scyppend; Br. up astah.—564
G.[1] n. wuldres sweg (?).—565 Br. hond godes wæs mid.—566 B.[1] forðlædde.

tō þām hālgan hām   heofna Ealdor.
Him ymbflugon   engla þrēatas þūsendmǣlum.
                      Þā hit þus gelomp,
570 þā gȳt nergende Crīst . . . . . .,   205 þæt hē þæs ymb [tē]ne niht   twelf apostolas mid his Gāstes gife,   gingran geswīðde.
Hæfde þā gesette   sāwla unrīm God lifigende.   Þā wæs Iūdas of,
575 sē ðe ǣr on tīfre   torhtne gesalde   210 Drihten Hǣlend;   him sēo dǣd ne geþēah þæs hē bebohte   Bearn Wealdendes on seolfres sinc;   him þæt swearte forgeald earm ǣglǣca   innon helle.   [eres; 580   Siteð nū on þā swīðran hond   Sunu his Fæd- 215 dǣleð dōgra gehwǣm   Drihten weoroda help and hǣlo   hǣleþa bearnum geond middangeard.   Þæt is monegum cūð þæt hē āna is   ealra gescefta 585 Wyrhta and Waldend   þurh his wuldres cræft. 220
Siteð him on heofnum   hālig Encgel, Waldend mid wītegum.   Hafað wuldres Bearn his seolfes seld   swegl bet[o]lden.
Laðað ūs þider tō lēohte   þurh his lǣcedōm, 590 þǣr wē mōton seolfe   sittan mid Drihtne,   225 uppe mid englum,   habban þæt ilce lēoht,

---

568 *G.*¹, W. ymb flugon.—570ᵇ D. cyðan het; *G.*¹ mid niððum wunode; *H.*¹ mid niððum wæs; Gs. reads 570: þa gyt mid niððum wæs, nergende Crist.—571ᵃ *MS., J., T., B.*¹, *G.*¹, W. ymb ane niht; Br., Wnrs. ymb tyn niht þæs.—571ᵇ *H.*¹ endleofan.—573 One letter erased after ge.—574 *T., B.*¹ of . . ./.—575 T. n. suggests tibre but withdraws it in Corrigenda.—579 *G.*¹, W. inn on.—580 Gs. omits hond.—584 J. corrects in Errata his misreading gesceafta.—586 D. h.
engla waldend; *G.*¹, Gs. þengel for encgel; W. encgla.—588 MS.
swegl betalden, t canceled and erased (? by C.); C. adds he above;
*J., G.*¹, D. sweglbefalden; *T., B.*¹, W. sweglbehealden.—589ᵃ MS.
leaðað, e erased; Edd. laðað.—589ᵇ *G.*¹ omits his; *G.*¹ restores.

þǣr his hîred nû   hâlig eardað, wunað in wynnum,   þǣr is wuldres blǣd torht ontŷned.   Uton [teala] hycgan

595   þæt wê Hǣlende   hêran georne,   230 Crîste cwêman.   Þǣr is cûðre lîf þonne wê on eorðan   mægen ǣfre gestrêonan.

[XII]

Hafað nû geþingod tô ûs   Þeoden mǣra, ælmihtig God . . . . . .

600   on dômdæge   Drihten seolfa,   235 hâteð hêhenglas   hlûddre stefne bêman blâwan   ofer burga geseotu, geond [þâ fêower]   foldan scêatas.
Þonne of þisse moldan   men onwecnað;

605   dêade of dûste ârîsað   þurh Drihtnes miht.   240 Þæt bið daga lengust,   and di[nn]a mǣst hlûd gehêred,   þonne Hǣlend cymeð, Waldend mid wolcnum   in þâs woruld fǣreð.

Wile þonne gescea[r]ian   wlitige and unclǣne

610   on twâ healfe,   tile and yfle.   245

---

592 h of his added above line.—594 T. gap of a hemistich after ontyned; uton—hælende = one hemistich; B.¹ torht ontyned gif we teala bencað; D., G.¹ uton teala; W. uton . . . hycgan.—595 B.¹
uton hycgan—georne /.—596 G.¹ þæt for þær.—598 Capital H dis- tinctly resembles ornamental capitals of first portion of MS. Junius XI.—599 T. (n.) thinks leaf certainly cut out after god; B.¹ god ; G.¹ supplies for 599ᵇ: oðre siðe; W. god . . . . . . /.— 600 A repetition of on begins p. 227.—601ᵃ One letter erased before heh-; C. heah-.—601ᵇ G.¹, W. hludre.—602 C. byman.—603 B.¹ sceatas ; G.¹ geond feower; H.¹, Gæ. as in text; Wnrs. thinks this reading not long enough.—604 C., T., B.¹, G.¹, W. onwecnað.—606 MS., J. dimma; T. n.: clearly error for
dinna; B.¹ dynna; G.¹, W. dinna.—607 C., T., B.¹, G.¹ gehyred.—609
MS., J., T., G.¹, W. gesceawian; T. n.: error for gesceadan; B.¹, Gæ. gesceadan; G.¹ gescearian.—610 B.¹ ifle.

　　Him þā sōðfæstan　on þā swīðran hond mid rodera Weard　reste gestīgað.
　　Þonne bēoð blīðe　þā in burh mōton
　　. . . gongan　in Godes rīce.

615　And hēo gesēnað　mid his swīðran hond　　250
　　Cynincg alwihta,　cleopað ofer ealle:
　　'Gē sind wilcuman;　gāð in wuldres lēoht tō heofona rīce,　þǣr habbað gē ā tō aldre　ēce reste.'

620　Þonne stondað þā forhtan,　þā ðe firnedon;　255

622　bēoð beofigende　hwonne him Bearn Godes dēman wille　þurh his dǣda spēd.
　　Wēnað þæt hēo mōten　tō þǣre mǣran byrig

625　ūp tō englum　swā ōðre dydon.
　　Ac him bið reordende　. . . . . .　　260
　　ēce Drihten　ofer ealle gecwæð:
　　'Āstīgað nū, āwyrgde,　in þæt wītehūs ofostum miclum;　nū ic ēow ne con.'

630　Sōna æfter þǣm wordum　wērige gāstas, helle hæftas,　hwyrftum scrīþað　　265

613 C., T., B.[1] þa þe.—614 C. alters to gangan; T. rice * * *; B.[1] rice gumena bearn; D. þa in burhweallas / moton gongan; G.[1] glæd-mode gongan; G.[2] gegnum gongan; W. . . . gongan.—618[a] Gs. heofonrice.—618[b] MS., J., T., B.[1], G.[1], W. þær ge habbað; H.[2] þær ge habban sculon; Gs. as in text; Cs. þær ge habbað nu.—619 C. alters to reste.—620[a] MS., J., T., B.[1], G.[1], W. forworhtan; Gs. (Metrik): stondað should perhaps be omitted; Gs. (Beiträge) forhtan (?).—620[b] G.[1] on þa winstran hond /. G.[1] then reads as 621: þa þe firnedon on foldan æfre.—622 MS. at first þonne; scribe alters þ to w, adds h above.—626 ah altered to ac (? by C.); J. ah; MS. reodende (?) + 2 erased letters; C. makes e (? a, u) into i by erasure, erases n, adds en above, and r above o, i. e., reordiende; J. reodiende; T., B.[1], G.[1], W. reordiende; T. n. suggests rodera waldend for 626[b]; B.[1], G.[1] accept; T., W. gap of a hemistich after reordiende; Cs. reordende and reðe word /.—627 C., T., B.[1], G.[1] gecwyð.—629 Edd. except W. ofestum.—630 MS. æft.—631 B.[1] hellehæftas.

þūsendmǣlum, and þider leaðað in þæt sceaðena scræf, scūfað tō grunde in þæt nearwe nīð. And nō seoððan 635 þæt hīe ûp þonan ǣfre mōton, ah þǣr geþolian sceolon [þ]earlic wīte, 270 clom and carcern, and þone caldan grund dēopne ādrēogan and dēofles spellunge :

hū hīe him on edwīt oft āsettað,

640 swarte sūslbonan, stǣleð [fēondas] fǣhðe and firne, þǣr ðe hīe [Frēo]drihten, 275 ēcne Anwaldan, oft forgēaton, þone þe hīe him tō hihte habban sceoldon.
Uton, lā! geþencan geond þās worulde

645 þæt wē Hǣlende hēran onginnen; georne þurh Godes gife gemunan gāstes blēd : 280
hū ēadige þǣr uppe sittað selfe mid swegle sunu Hǣlendes.
Þǣr is geat gylden gimmum gefrætewod,

---

632 he (or possibly þe; J., W. think hi, S.[1] thinks þe) erased before þider; MS. leaðað; C. erases first a, alters e to ę and first ð to d; J. hi þider leaðað; T., B.[1], G.[1], W. lædað.—634 G.[1] nīð; GK. nīðer (?).—636 MS., Edd. except G.[1] earmlic; em. G.[1]—638 S.[1] (þ. 514), Gs. spel.—639[a] Br. on him edwit (or edwit on him).—639[b] et of asettað almost hidden by wrinkle in parchment.—640[b]-642 MS., J. stǣleð fǣhðe and in firne þǣr ðe hīe drihten; T. swarte—fǣhðe = one hemistich, then and in firne . . . . .; B.[1] fǣhðe / in firne . . ., þæs—drihten / ; D. fǣhðe in firnum / þæs ðe hīe—forgeaton /; G.[1] þonne Satanus stǣleð / fǣhðe in firene þæs þe hīe freodrihten /; W. . . . . stǣleð / fǣhðe in firne—drihten / ecne—forgeaton /; H.[2] þonne Satan stǣleð / fǣhðe in firene; H.[3] Satan stǣleð /; Cs. synna stǣleð / fǣhðe and firene þæs ðe hīe freadrihten /; K. (Anglia 27. 229-233) fǣhðe and firne.—643 MS. þonne; scribe erases first n, adds þe above ne; J. ðonne, omits þe; T., B.[1], G.[1] þone hīe; W. þone þe.—644 Gs. woruld.—645 C. hyran.—648 C. sylfe; MS., G.[1], W. mid swegle torht sunu; T., B.[1] swegeltorht; G.[1] n.: swegeltorhtne (?). 'oder sunu Nom. Plur.!' Sprachschatz swegle; H.[3], Gs., Wurs. sweogltorht; H. (Eng. Stud. 51. 181) omits seolfe and reads mid swegeltorhtne.—649 ne erased after gylden; J. gyldenne.

650   wynnum bewunden,   þǣm þe in·wuldres lēoht gongan mōten   tō Godes rīce.   285
      And ymb þā weallas   wlitige scīnað engla gāstas   and ēadige sāwla, þā ðe heonon fērað. . . . . . .
655   Þǣr martiras   Meotode cwēmað, and herigað hēhfæder   hālgum stefnum   290 Cyning in cestre.   Cweþað ealle þus:
      'Þū eart hæleða Helm   and Heofendēma, engla Ordfruma,   and eorðan tūdor 660   [ūp gelǣddest]   tō þissum ēadigan hām.'
      Swā wuldres Weard   wordum herigað   295 þegnas ymb Þēoden.   Þǣr is þrym micel, sang æt selde.   Is sylf Cyning, ealra Aldor,   in ðǣre ēcan gesceft.
665   Þæt is se Drihten,   sē ðe dēað for ūs geþrōwode,   Þēoden engla.
      Swylce hē fæste   fēowertig daga,
      Metod mancynnes,   þurh his mildsa spēd.
      Þā gewearð þone wēregan,   þe ǣr āworpen wæs   5 670   of heofonum,   þæt hē in helle gedēaf, þā costode   Cyning alwihta.
      Brōhte him tō bearme   brāde stānas, bæd him for hungre   hlāfas wyrcan—
      'gif þū swā micle   mihte hæbbe.'   10

653 sawla begins p. 228; T. gap of a hemistich after sawla.—654 B.¹ ferað heofonrice to; G.¹ ferað to heofonrice; W. as in text.—658-9 MS., J. -deman, -fruman (? n of -fruman erased); other Edd. as in text; T. gap of 3 hemistichs after tudor; Gs. (Metrik) tudr.—660 B.¹ * * * to—ham / (so W.); G.¹ as in text.—664 MS., J. aðor; C. adds e, 1 above and changes ð to d (i. e., reads ealdor); other Edd. aldor.—665 Before 665 W. sets the title: Versuchung Christi.—667 J. dæga.—670 Scribe adds he above line; S.¹ (p. 514) heah of h.; Gs. of heofonrice.—671 G.¹, W. þæt he costode.

675   Þā him andswarode ēce Drihten:
        'Wēndest þū, āwyrgda, þæt āwriten nǣre
                    ·   ·   ·
                        nymþe mē ænne,
                ·   ·   ·
        'ac geseted hafast, sigores Āgend, lifigendum līht, lēan būtan ende,   15 680   on heofenrīce, hālige drēamas.'
                    ·   ·   ·

680A   Þā hē mid hondum genōm [hæleða Scyppend], atol þurh edwīt, and on esle āhōf, herm bealowes gāst, and on beorh āstāh;
        āsette on dūne Drihten Hǣlend:
        'Lōca nū ful wīde ofer londbēwende: 20 685   ic þē geselle [on] þines seo[l]fe[s] d[ō]m folc and foldan; fōh hider tō mē burh and breotone bold tō gewealde, rodora rīces, gif þū sēo riht Cyning engla and monna, swā ðū ǣr myntest.'   25 690   Þā him andswarode ēce Drihten:
        'Gewīt þū, āwyrgda, in þæt wītescræf, Sātānus seolf; þē is sūsl weotod

---

676 T., W. long gap after nære; G.[1] gap of more than one hemistich (B.[1] had assumed gap of only one hemistich before nymþe).—677 B.[1], G.[1], W. take nymþe me ænne as 677[b].—678 G.[1] hafað; Trautmann in Wnrs. ac þu.—680 B.[1], G.[1], W. on—genom as one line; S.[2], Gz. divide as in text, but leave no gap after dreamas; G.[1] n. þa hine (?); Gz.
proposes for 680A[b] halig scyppend.—681 C., W., Wnrs. ehsle.—682 MS., J. her; C., G.[1], W. herm; G.[1] n. bær for herm (?); T., B.[1] hermbealowes; Gz. blac bealowes; MS. s of bealowes added later (? by scribe).—684 C. erases e, cancels w of -bewende, writes u above e; T., B.[1], G.[1], W. -buende; S.[2] (p. 515), Gz., Wnrs. -buend—685[b] MS., J., T. þines seoferdum; Manning in Suppl. to Lye's Dictionar., B.[1] seolfes dom; G.[1], W. as in text.—686[b] B.[1] feoll niðer.— 687[a] J. breoton; B.[1] beorhtne; B.[1] beorhte.—687[b] C., Edd. except J. to before gewealde.—688 G.[1], W., Wms. þæt for gif.—689 e of ær almost hidden in wrinkle.

geara tōgegnes,   nalles Godes rīce.
Ah ic þē hāte   þurh þā hēhstan miht 30 695 þæt ðū hellwarum   hyht ne ābēode; ah þū him secgan miht   sorga mǣste:
þæt ðū gemēttes   Meotod alwihta, Cyning moncynnes.   Cer ðē on bæcling!
Wite þū ēac, āwyrgda,   hū wīd and sīd 35 700 hel heo[r]odrēorig,   and mid hondum āmet; grīp wið þæs grundes;   gang þonne swā oððæt þū þone ymbhwyrft   alne cunne;
and ǣrest āmet   ufan tō grunde, and hū sīd sēo   se swarta ēōm. 40 705 Wāst þū þonne þē geornor   þæt þū wið God wunne, seoððan þū þonne hafast   handum āmetene hū hēh and dēop   hell inneweard sēo, grim grǣfhūs.   Gong ricene tō, ǣr twā seondon   tīda āgongene, 45 710 þæt ðū merced hūs   āmeten hæbbe.'
Þā þām wērga wearð   wrece getenge.

---

693 C., Edd. except J. gearo.—698 C. cyr.—699ᵇ T. n.: sy or seo seems to be wanting; D.: add sie or seo; Cs.: sie lost (Sievers, note on Cs.: if sie lost, it must have come after hu); H. (Eng. Stud. 5r.
181) hu wid sie.—700ᵃ MS., J., T., B.¹, G.¹, W. helheoðo; B.² heahðo or hel seo for helheoðo; G.¹ n.: hel heorodreorig? (accepted by Gs. and H., Eng. Stud. 5r. 181); Cs. hel heaðodreorig; Trautmann, Bonner Beitr. 2. 149, hel deop sig.—704 MS., J., T., W. sid se swarta eōm seo; T. n.: and wid probably omitted after sid; B.¹, Wms. sid and wid; G.¹ n. swoleðm seo; G.¹ (Nachträgl. Verbesserungen) sweðm; cf. MHG. swadem (?); Cs. as in text; H. (Eng. Stud. 5r.
181) hu sid seo se swarta eðel.—705 Gs. (Metrik) þon.—706 Gs.
seoððan þu þon handum.—707 S.² (p. 515), Gs. inne.—708 T. considerable gap after to; B.¹ to . . .; S.² (p. 515), Gs., Wms. grimme.
—709 MS., J., W. seond; C., T., B.¹, G.¹, H.¹, Gs. seondon; Cs.
seon.—710 Cs. þæt þu þæt merce.—711 Another scribe begins p. 299 with þa; MS., J. werga; C., other Edd. werigan; C. alters first e of wrece to a, cancels second e, writes v above; Edd. except J. wracu.

Sātān seolua ran   and on sūsle gefēol,
713   earm ǣglēce.   Hwīlum mid folmum mæt   50 715   wēan and wītu.   Hwīlum se wonna lēg lǣhte wið þes lāþan.   Hwīlum hē licgan geseah hæftas in hylle.   Hwīlum rēam āstāg, ðonne hē on þone atolan   ēagum gesāwun.
     Hæfdon gewunnon   Godes andsacan 720   . .   55
     blāc bealowes gāst   þæt hē on botme stōd.
     Þā him þūhte   þæt þanon wǣre tō helle duru   hund þūsenda mīla gemèarcodes: swā hine se Mihtiga hēt 725   þæt þurh s[ī]nne cræft   sūsle āmǣte;
     ðā hē gemunde,   þā hē on grunde stōd.   60 Lōcade lēas wiht   geond þæt lāðe scræf, atol mid ēgum,   oððæt egsan gryre 729-730   dēofla mænego   þonne ūp āstāg;   64-5 wordum in wītum   ongunnon þā wērigan gāstas reordian and cweðan:
     'Lā! þus bēo nū on yfele,   noldæs ǣr teala.'

FINIT LIBER II. AMEN.

---

712 MS. ra; C., Edd. ran.—713 C. alters to æglęce; J., T., B.¹
æglæce; G.¹ æglæca in to helle; W. æglæca; G.¹ reads as 714: feond in fyrlocan. Hwilum—mæt /; H.¹ earmum for folmum.—715 e of leg from æ by erasure; J. læg.—716 G.¹ þæs.—717 C., Edd. hream;
C., T., B.¹, G.¹ astah.—718 MS. Ðonne; T., B.¹, G.¹, W., Wms. hie
for he.—719 G.¹ gryre gewunnen; W., H.¹, Wms. gewunnen; H.¹: hæfdon gewunnen = 719ᵃ; then a gap of 2 hemistichs; godes and-sacan = 720ᵇ.—720 G.¹ proposes þonne him se atola andweard stod;
W. n.: gap of one line.—721 s of bealowes by another hand (? C.);
J. bealowe.—723 MS., J., T., B.¹ place end-pause after mila; B.¹
helleduru.—724 B.¹ mihtige.—725 MS., Edd. synne; G.¹ sinne; G.¹
susl.—726 G.¹ gaste gemunde; H.¹ gemde þæt; H.¹ gemde.—729ᵇ T., B.¹, W. leave vacant, as also 730ᵇ; for Grein's restoration of 729-732, see note on 731ᵇ-732; H.¹ dreogan (for Grein's adreogan).—730 B.¹
upastag.—731 J., T., B.¹, G.¹ inwitum; MS., J. þa on þa; T., B.¹, G.¹, W. omit on þa; MS. werigan /; T., B.¹, G.¹, W. gastas /.—732ᵇ T., B.¹, W. leave vacant.

STRUCTURAL OUTLINE

NOTES

1-20. Other passages in OE. poetry treating the theme of the Creation will be found in Cædmon's Hymn; Gen. A 97-234; Beow. 90-8; Rid. 41; Chr. 224-235; Gu. 21-4; Gloria 14-26. The similarities of Sat. with Genesis 1 are only very general.

1. Þæt wearð underne . . . þæt . . . þā: 'It was revealed . . . that . . . when.' The expression underne involves litotes.

2a. It is improbable that hī (him), which the Corrector has inserted after Meotod, and which has not been recorded by other editors, was in the original. However, it cannot be a mere trial of the pen. I take it to be a superfluous addition of the Corrector, though, as far as sense is concerned, it could stand; cf. similar reflexive datives in 82 and 118.

As to who is meant by Meotod see the note on 9-10.

2b. So Gen. 950ᵃ.

3. Cf. Prov. 30. 4. (all Biblical references are to the Vulgate): 'Quis suscitavit omnes terminos terræ?' Ps. 103. 5: 'Qui fundasti terram super stabilitatem suam' (Ps. 103. 6: 'Hē gefæstnude foldan staðelas'); Jul. 499: folde gefæstnad.

4. gesette sunnan and mōnan. Cf. Gen. 1. 16; also Beow. 94; Ps. 73. 16. 2.

4ᵃ=13ᵃ.

5. See Gen. 1. 9.

5b-8. This passage taken as as whole has puzzled commentators more than any other in the poem. The metre rules out Thorpe's and Bouterwek's pointing of 5-6, as represented by the former's translation: 'the stream without, the sea-water and clouds.' Cosijn (PBB. 21. 21) suspects the phrase strēam ūt on sǣ, and suggests strēamas and ūtsǣ, without being satisfied with it himself. I see nothing suspicious in the MS. reading. Ūt on sǣ or garsecg(e) occurs in Met. 19. 19; 16. 12; and Ps. 96. 1. Indeed, 'the flood out on the sea' seems not without poetical fitness.

6a. The e inserted in wolcn is clearly by the Corrector. The n is syllabic.

6b. For similar phrases cf. 13, 14, 392, 585, and Ph. 394.

7. The MS. reading of line 7 is perfectly clear. Grein in his note on the form ymblyt, by interpreting the accent intended to distinguish the y of ymb-, and the check after the letter t, which marks the cæsura, as crosses for ð's, which they never could have represented, constructs the unexampled ȝþmȝð (translated ' flutenmasse '). This reading he seems to have abandoned immediately. Lye (Dictionarium) considers ymblyt equivalent to ymbwlit (for ymbwlited), which is unacceptable, even if we take dēopne as a modifier of strēam, and disregard phonology; for such a reading would lay absurd emphasis on Christ's powers of vision, in view of the clear expression of these powers in the very next lines. Grein, after 1857, and all other scholars save Holthausen and Bright, read ymblyt. Clēne also is clear in the MS. The cl has been usually mistaken for, or emended to, d. From the side of palæography, a reasonably normal OE. d would not be so likely to be misread cl as a modern d, but possibly was thus misread here.

I shall not attempt to weigh separately each reading and interpretation which has been suggested for line 7, but merely give the three general views which appear fairly satisfactory. First, there is the reading of the MS. substantially as it stands. This we may translate 'The Creator in his might wholly embraces the deep expanse (i.e. the ocean which surrounds the world) and all the earth.' This is the view at the basis of the present text, and is that held with slight variations by Thorpe, Bouterwek[1], Ettmüller, Wülker, and Kennedy. No good derivation has been proposed for ymblyt, but it has been assumed to be about equivalent to ymbhwyrft (cf. Rid. 41. 7). There is a verb, ymblīðan, 'surround', represented by emblīð in Wulfstan, Hom. 146. 24, to which ymblyt might conceivably be related. The generic meaning of the verb suits the substantive perfectly. The normal WS. form of a verbal abstract, parallel to ymblīðan, would be ymblīð or ymblide (cf. scride, etc., Sievers, Gram. 263. 1). In Northumbrian this might have been ymblīð or ymblid (Gram. 263, n. 5). The final t might be due either to scribal error, or to the fact that phonological confusion among the letters ð, d, and t was not uncommon in early English (see Gram. 357, n. 2). The y for i would be another instance of a LWS. characteristic which occurs four times in the manuscript of Christ and Satan (see Gram. 22). But if any one feels suspicious of ymblyt, he may, with Holthausen, substitute ymbhwyrft in the text. For clēne as an adverb, cf. 18, and the other instances given in Grein-Köhler Sprachschatz. The chief difficulty with this reading is that it involves the alliteration ymb- : ymb-. Thorpe sought to avoid this by changing the second ymb- to ūp-. A repetition, due to scribal oversight, of such a syllable as ymb is not uncommon; hence the emendation is legitimate. However, it may be said in defense of ymb- : ymb- that we have here merely an extension of the identical vocalic alliteration, which, though avoided, is by no means wholly missing in OE. prosody. It may have been employed in this with the conscious purpose of emphasizing the wide inclusiveness of the Creator's grasp. Prefixes (though, I believe, always atonic and non-alliterating ones) are often repeated in OE. lines, as for example in 468, forbræc ond forbēgde.

The second interpretation accepts the substantive ymblyt (or ymbhwyrft), but changes clēne to some word with initial d, which alliterates with dēopne. As expanded D-verses are at least avoided in the second hemistich of the OE. long line, words like derne and dēre should be considered metrically suspicious, not to mention their questionable aptness. Therefore the acc. fem. dene (Sprachschatz: vallis, convallis, . . . abyssi? oceani?), as a parallel to ymblyt, is the most acceptable word. Dene is sometimes used to describe the abyss of chaos or hell.

Bright (MLN. 18. 129) has proposed a third, very ingenious exegesis. He reads lines 5-8 thus:

> stānas and eorðan; strēam ūt on sǣ,
> wæter and wolcen, ðurh his wundra miht, > dēopne ymblȳhte. Dene ymbhaldeð > Metod on mihtum and alne middangeard.

Ymblȳhte is a completion of the 'predication begun in gesette'; dēopne qualifies strēam. Bright thinks that the poet in this passage is reciting 'the initial acts of the creation, . . . in non-Biblical order, to be sure, yet in essential agreement with the account in which the dispelling of the darkness from the "face of the deep," upon which moved the "Spirit of God," and the dividing of "the waters from the waters" (cf. wæter and wolcen), are of importance coördinate with the establishment of "the earth, the sun, and the moon."' Strēam, then, 'represents the undivided waters, as shown by the apposition of wæter and wolcen.' It may be objected that, though strēam alone might be, the very concrete phrase, strēam ūt on sǣ, does not seem at all suited to the idea of 'the undivided waters,' which existed before any land had appeared from which the strēam could be ūt, and hence could not be equated with wæter ond wolcen. The latter form an independent component of the object of gesette, paralleling the coördinated sunnan and mōnan, stānas and eorðan. The poet has expressed himself very awkwardly if he intended to convey a conception somewhat similar to Milton's lines in the apostrophe to Light, Paradise Lost 3. 8-11:

> Before the Sun,
> Before the Heavens thou wert, and at the voice
> Of God, as with a Mantle, didst invest
> The rising world of waters dark and deep.

9-10. Cf. Job 38. 16; also Job 28. 11: 'Profunda quoque fluviorum scrutatus est.'

I have accepted the emendation geofene, proposed by Grein, for three reasons. First, it gives a more suitable meaning to the phrase of 10[a]: 'He can see through the ocean, the very bottom of the deep.' Secondly, the alliteration makes it especially appropriate. Thirdly, in heofene is to be suspected because in the Sprachschatz, for the phrase, 'in heaven' (usually in the sense of the abode of God and the blessed), there are but three cases of on (in) heofone, whereas on heofonum is very frequent; it occurs six times in Sat. alone. In prose also, when heofon is unmodified by adjective or article, it is, judging from the quotations in Bosworth-Toller, practically always in the plural after on. The three cases of the singular in the poetry are all in Gen. B, which, being a translation from the Old Saxon, may well reflect the usage of that language in this phrase. Heyne's glossary to the Heliand gives more than fifteen cases of himil in the dat. sing., none in the plural.

The reservation of the explicit subject of all the transitive verbs in the first ten lines, to wit, Godes ágen Bearn, until the tenth line is a stylistic blemish (even though the poet may have intended this late designation of the subject to furnish a climax to his period), in view of the fact that the actions previously recounted are more often assigned to the first person of the Trinity. The original source of the conception of Christ as creator is, of course, to be found in such passages as John 1. 3, Col. 1. 16, and Rom. 11. 36. In these verses, however, the central idea is that of Christ's being a mediating agency. Yet it was only a slight extension of this idea to say that Christ created the visible universe, as is continually done by the Fathers: e. g., Ambrose, Hexaem. 1. 5 (Migne, Patr. Lat. 14. 131), says, 'Egregie itaque Apostolus et hoc loco [i. e., Col. 1. 16] Filium dixit auctorem omnium.' See also Chr. 239-240; Rid. 7. 1-2.

11-13. Cf. Ecclus. 1. 2: 'Arenam maris, et pluviæ guttas, et dies sæculi quis dinumeravit?' General similarities to 11-13 may also be found in Isa. 40. 12; Job 38. 16; 36. 27; 28. 26; cf. Harrowing 116 ; Ps. 146. 4. For genitives in -as see Sievers-Cook, Grammar of Old English, 237, n. 1.

There is some question about the pointing of 9-17. The scribe, who has been followed by Thorpe and Bouterwek, begins a new sentence with scolus, 13. Ettmüller and Kennedy place a semicolon after gehwelcne, and a period after miht. This gives a greatly improved stylistic effect. Grein and Wülker have an impossible arrangement, beginning a new sentence with daga, and merely putting a comma after miht. I have followed Ettmüller, though not without considerable hesitation, because the first pointing would bring out a rather striking parallel between Ecclus. 1. 2 and the present passage, in the idea of Christ's numbering both the raindrops and the days.

15. Cf. Gloria 22-3; Gu. 22-1.

16a. Dæles is undoubtedly acc. plur. of dǽl, not a late spelling of dalas. It means 'regions,' 'parts,' as in Napier's Old English Glosses (Analecta Oxoniensia) 1. 1443, where we read: 'climatis, i. partis, dæles' (our word exactly, both in meaning and inflection). Dǽles is metrically and grammatically preferable to dæles (for dalas). Eorðan (worulde) dǽles (-as) occurs in Ps. 138. 5; Beow. 1732. See Sievers, Gram. 237, n. 3, for the inflection.

16-17a. There is little doubt that the poet is referring to the triple creation of earth, heaven, and sea, which we meet with so often both in the Bible and in the other OE. poems. See Ex. 20. 11; Ps. 145. 6; Acts 4. 24; 14. 14; Rev. 14. 7; and especially Chr. 967:

> sǽs mid hyra fiscum, > eorþan mid hire beorgum, and ūpheofon > torhtne mid his tunglum;

and Gen. 99: 'God . . . wolde þæt him eorðe and ūproder and sīd wæter geseted wurde.' For the collocation of eorðan and ūpheofon cf. An. 797-8: 'hwā . . . tēode eorðan eallgrēne and ūpheofon;' Ps. 101. 22: 'geworhtest eorþan frætwe and ūpheofen.' Graz is justified in calling the lines as they stand in the MS. metrically correct. But that reading leaves us with holme, which cannot be masc. acc., because Bülbring, Altenglisches Elementarbuch 440, denies to the combination lm the faculty of forming a syllable or developing an auxiliary vowel. This rules out Bright's description of holme as 'merely a phonetic spelling of holm.' Sāsel and the fem. nom. sāwle (Soul's Address 5), which he adduces as similar developments, do not seem perfectly analogous to holme. I do, however, accept Bright's reading of the text as the correct one. The scribe may have been misled into reading as he did the ond ūpheofonond hēanne which may well have stood in his copy, by his previous mistake in in heofene, 10.

On hēanne see Sievers, Gram. 222, n. 2; 295, n. 1. Although the a above the line looks like the scribe's hand, I suspect that Anglian hēnne was the original form.

18a. Neither 'pure intelligence' (Thorpe) nor 'den reinen Urgedanke' (Bouterwek) as renderings of orðonc clēne appears possible, because they imply 'gemination simplified' in a position in which it is not likely to occur. Clēne should be construed as an adverb. Literally the passage means, 'Who is there that understands art (or invention) perfectly save eternal God?' The absence of the article before a somewhat uncommon word is against considering orðonc to stand for 'the Creation' or 'that mighty work' (Kennedy). Grein's 'Kunstgeschick' is better.

Attention should be called to the LWS. Corrector's glossing of nymðe by būton. The occurrence of six cases of nymðe in a poem of 733 lines is favorable to Anglian, and against Kentish provenience.
See Jordan, Eigentümlichkeiten des Anglischen Wortschatzes, pp. 62-3 and pp. 47-8. Even Tupper can bring little against this criterion of dialect (cf. PMLA. 26. 260 and JEGP. 11. 86).

19 ff. Gebēode is another crux. One may render the lines either:
'Joys he apportioned (or distributed), prosperity, and tongues (i. e., peoples): first Adam and that noble race;' or, with Kock (Jubilee Jaunts and Jottings): 'Joys gave he and prosperity, and made first Adam, etc.;' or, from Bright's reading: 'Joys he gave to old and young (geogoðe): Adam [was] first and that noble race, etc.' Kock retains gebēode, assigning it the sense of 'accomplish,' i. e., 'make.'
In Chr. 377 the word means 'do,' 'perform,' but I nowhere find evidence for Kock's extension of this to 'make,' 'create.' Thorpe's slight emendation of gebēode to getēode would give a more satisfactory verb. Graz objected to pointing the text in this way, because a new independent clause would have to be begun in the middle of a hemistich; and such a period would be rather awkward, since the asyndeton would leave duguðe isolated. If one is inclined to accept geogoðe, Bright's interpretation is convincing. A very slight confirmation of his view is the scribe's capitalization of Ādām, which might indicate that he considered it the first word of a new sentence.
(The scribes in this MS. never use capitals merely to indicate proper names.) Williams (Short Extracts from Old English Poetry, p. 81) takes gebēode as the pret. sing. of gebēon (gebȳwan), 'impress,' 'imprint,' 'mark.' He compares Rid. 41. 91, but there gebēon has its radical meaning of 'repress,' 'restrain.' Leechdoms 1. 354. 9 has gebȳwan, meaning to press into a certain shape. But, on the whole, as the angels would have to be included in the object, and as they were not likely to be thought of as molded into shape as man was molded from clay, this interpretation seems questionable. Since the MS. reading makes sense, and gives a fair transition to the fall of the angels, which is the real purpose of the lines, I let it stand. The use of gebēode for 'people' is similar to that of Lat. lingua; see Du Cange.

Cf. Deut. 32. 8: 'Quando dividebat Altissimus gentes.' For the collocation of drēamas and dugoðe, cf. Chr. 1409, and especially, 'sē þās foldan gescēop, duguðe and drēamas,' Grein-Wülker 2. 280. 10-1.

See Sat. 581 for the conception of God as a dispenser of gifts to men.

Bright intended by his interpretation to free the poet from the charge of heresy in 'placing the creation of man before that of the angels.' (Groschopp, p. 252, n. 2, accused his 'restaurator' of this.) Bright contends justly that the phrasing of line 20 does not imply chronological priority. It may be added that there was agreement among neither Jewish nor Christian writers in regard to the date of the creation of angels, an event of which we are not explicitly informed in the Biblical accounts. See R. H. Charles' notes on the Book of Jubilees 2. 2-4. Jubilees assigns this creation to the first day. Epiphanius, Hær. 65. 4, Augustine, Civ. Dei 11. 9, and the Fathers in general, accept this view, including the angels in the word cælum, Gen. 1. 1, and citing Job 38. 7 as evidence that the angels were spectators of the later works of creation. According to Charles, 'Talmudic Judaism held that the angels were created on the second or the fifth day. . . . Philo, Leg. Allegor. 1. 2, represents [their creation] . . . as accomplished on the seventh day,' thus later than that of man. Ungemach (Die Quellen der Fünf Ersten Chester Plays, p. 20) interprets the first Towneley Play as placing the creation and fall of angels on the fifth day, just before man is formed, but, though this is possibly true, it is a pure assumption; for the text of the play does not specifically record their creation. There is some doubt whether our poet could have heard of any such tradition as that of Philo, but at any rate he is guilty of no special absurdity or heresy in the line.

20. On the orders of angels (cyn), see note to 366. For the phrasing cf. 473; also Gu. 579: 'þära giefena, þe God gescōp englum ǣrest and eorðwarum.'

The evolution of the conception of the Devil is most thoroughly treated in Gustav Roskoff's Geschichte des Teufels. More general and popular is Paul Carus' History of the Devil and the Idea of Evil. C. Abbetmeyer's Old English Poetical Motives derived from the Doctrine of Sin has very useful chapters on 'The Fall of the Angels' and 'Satan, the Fallen Archangel.' Grimm's Deutsche Mythologie contains material pertinent to devils and hell, as depicted in this poem (see chapters 25 and 32).

The following Biblical and apocryphal passages have been held to refer to the fall of the angels: Gen. 6. 2 ff.; Isa. 14. 12-5; Ezek. 28. 1-19; Enoch 6-10; the Slavonic Book of the Secrets of Enoch 29. 4; Luke 10. 18; 2 Pet. 2. 4; Jude 6; Rev. 12. 3-4, 7-9. The accounts in the following OE. poems should be compared: Gen. 12-77, 246 ff.; Jul. 418-428; El. 759-771, 939-952; An. 1185-94, 1376-85; Gu.

520-656 passim; Minds of Men 57-66; Prayers 4. 54-7; Sal. 440-474; also Rask's Grammar of the Anglo-Saxon Tongue, pp. 104-5, for Ælfric's treatment, and Wulfstan, Hom. 8. 12 ff.; 145. 22. The most interesting passages for our purpose in patristic literature are Gregory the Great's Hom. in Evang. 2. 34 (Patr. Lat. 76. 1249; for further references to Gregory, see Lau, Gregor der Grosse, pp. 362-4) and Aldhelm's De Virg. 2446-2904 (ed. Ehwald, pp. 452-471).

22. Dühte him on mōde. We find similar expressions of self-deception on the part of Lucifer and his followers in 55, 59, 84; Gen. B 268, 276; Gu. 635.

22b. Cf. Gu. 548: 'hit ne meahte swā,' for the omission of the substantive verb.

23b. swegles brytan. See Chr. 281. Compare especially Sat. 124-5 with lines 23-4. Ziegler (Der Poetische Sprachgebrauch in der sog. Cædmonschen Dichtungen, p. 22) notes that swegl as an expression for 'heaven' occurs six times in Part I of Sat., but is not found in the other two parts.

24b. See 125, 175; Gu. 637 ff.; Gen. 28. One cannot decide whether the Corrector meant to change wise into wiorse, worse, or wors, but 125 shows that wirse was what the scribe intended.

25. Cf. 276, 345; Gen. 1556; Ps. 106. 35.

26a. ān æfter ōðrum. Schücking (Untersuchungen zur Bedeutungslehre der Angelsächsischen Dichtersprache, p. 26, n.) thinks this refers to hām, so that the phrase would amount to, 'took up a new (altogether different) home after an old one.' He compares Prayers 4. 30: līf æfter ōþrum gesēo and gesēce. Without challenging his interpretation of æfter ōþrum in Prayer 4, I believe that both grammar and the use of similar phrases elsewhere are against his view of Sat. 26. We should expect ān to agree in case with the word to which it refers. Besides, there is evidence that some form of ān æfter ōðrum was as much a stereotyped formula for denoting the succession of a series of many members in OE. as 'one after another' is in Mod. E. Cf. Sal. 385: ān æfter ānum; and especially Ælfric, Hom. 2. 32. 7: 'Hī urnon ān æfter ānum; . . . ælc æfter ōðrum cȳdde mē þæt wundorlice Godes tācn.' The poetical image in the present passage is much more vivid as usually interpreted.

26b. Cf. 73, 129, 419, 633, 727; Gu. 534; Jul. 684; and Milton's 'Hell's deep-vaulted Den,' P. R. 1. 116. The OE. descriptions of hell are treated most thoroughly in Becker's Mediæval Visions of Heaven and Hell, pp. 49-69. The whole thesis is of value for the general subject. For the origins, see R. H. Charles' Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life. The Teutonic features are discussed and rather overemphasized in Deering's The Anglosaxon Poets on the Judgment Day, pp. 48-60, and Ferrell's Teutonic Antiquities in the Anglo-Saxon Genesis, pp. 21-5. Bede's picture of hell in De Die Judicii 90-111 (printed by Crawford in Anglia 48. 99-100 in connection with Genesis B) contains most of the features which combine to form the setting of Sat. 1-365.

27-28. Cf. Gu. 643:

> þæt gē wærnysse
> brynewylm hæbben, nales blētsunga.

This conception of surging flame or liquid fire, derived probably from the 'stagnum ignis' of Rev. 19. 20, appears again in 30, 39. Cf. Milton's 'tossing of these fiery waves,' P. L. 1. 184.

For the phrasing of this passage, see 42, 449, 693; Soul's Address 104; Gu. 588.

27b-28a. Cf. Rood 79-80.
See the other cases of weak adjectives unaccompanied by the definite article: 13, 35, 36, 168, 182, 215, 234, 327, 484, 598. This list is formed by correcting the lists of Brandl, E. Meyer, and Barnouw by one another, and omitting the cases of seolfa, which is a problem by itself. Barnouw (Textkrit. Untersuch. nach dem Gebrauch des Bestimmten Artikels, p. 108) explains the relatively large number of instances of this phenomenon in a late poem by calling them 'altertümliche floskeln, die dem dichter aus der älteren literatur geläufig waren.'

28b. swegles lēoht. So Gu. 457; Ph. 288; Eadw. 28.
29b. The correct reading is established by the parallel in Gu. 554-7:

> Nū þū in helle scealt > dēope gedūfan, nales Dryhtnes lēoht > habban in heofonum, hēahgetimbru, > seld on swegle.

The scribe did not understand the neut. plur. hēahgetimbru (see Sievers, Gram. 237, n. 5; the ending in the original may have been the normal u, which is often mistaken for a); so he added a d. But hēah is not a proper member to form verbal compounds (hēahþungen being the only possible analogical formation in the Sprachschatz). Cf. also Holthausen's note, Anglia 44. 354.
Cf., in addition to Gu., Gen. B 738-9 and Chr. 1182.

30. Cf. 670: 'þæt hē in helle gedēaf.'
Cosijn, PBB. 21. 22, thought 'die neueste Metrik' (meaning Graz's Beiträge zur Textkritik der sog. Cädmon'schen Dichtungen) went too far in calling the emendation sceoldun impossible. He adds: 'Dennoch ist die änderung sceoldun hier vorzuziehen, weil aus v. 27 hervorgeht, dass der sturz der engel hier nicht im praesens gedacht wird.' Though one may sympathise with Cosijn's dislike of the niceties of 'die neueste Metrik,' there can be no insurmountable objection to sceolun, considered as a historical present. (The existence of a historical present in OE. has, indeed, been questioned by some scholars.)

31=91. Cf. also 135 and Gn. 535: niþer under nessas nīole grundas. For the image which this phrase calls up, see Cook's note on Jud. 113. The whole passage, Judith 112-121, is full of ideas and turns of expression similar to those employed in the descriptions of hell in Satan and Guthlac.

32a. grēdige and gīfre. Cf. 192; Gen. B 793; Seaf. 62; Soul's Address 74.

32b. God āna wāt. So Ph. 355; Fates of Men 8.

33. The ge of scyldige looks to me like the scribe's hand. Frings' reference (Zs. f. Deutscha Philologie 45. 30) to Sievers (Gram.
214. 5) does not seem to support a wk. adj. scyldi, although it would allow us to accept scyldī as a strong form. Recent scholarly opinion is unfavorable to Wülker's statement ad loc: 'nach þæt auch die starke form stehen kann.' See Holthausen, Anglia Bb. 5. 232; Barnouw, op. cit., p. 105. (On the other hand, cf. Carpenter, Dekli-nation in der Nordhumbrischen Evangelienübersetzung, § 50.) Cf. Beow. 106: forscrifen hæfde.

34 ff. See Abbetmeyer's discussion of the growth of the literary species which he calls 'plaints' of the fallen angels (op. cit., pp. 17-9).
Ungemach (Die Quellen der Fünf Ersten Chester Plays, p. 28) thinks these a special feature of the Old English epic poetry, which is based on the writings of the Anglo-Saxon theologians. There are short passages in the first plays of the York, Chester, and Towneley cycles of mysteries which remind one strongly of these laments in Part I of Satan. Avitus in De Originali Peccato (Patr. Lat. 59. 332; ed.
Peiper, pp. 214-5), and Aldhelm in his riddle, Lucifer (ed. Ehwald, p. 135; cf. above, p. xxv, n. 33), put brief laments into the mouth of the fallen Lucifer. I quote the latter:

> O felix olim servata lege Tonantis!
> Heu! post hæc cecidi proterva mente superbus;
> Ultio quapropter funestum perculit hostem.

34a. See the note on 190-3.
The MS. form cleopad might be an error either for the pret. cleopade or for the pres. cleopaþ (on the possibility of present forms in -d, see Sievers, Gram. 357, n. 1, 2). The metre of the line makes the latter alternative much the more probable.

The present tense here would seem to be not merely an example of the historical present indicating an action taking place at a definite time in the past, that is, immediately after the fall of the angels, but rather, with Bonne, a means of introducing an action of indefinite date (or possibly even an action many times repeated), at any time between the fall and the New Testament period. The preterites used in the introductory phrases to all later laments, then, would simply signify the time of the speeches they introduce with reference to this first one. In other words, we should consider 1-33 as wholly preliminary, a sort of prologue giving the setting of the speeches to follow, but not recounting what is in any way a portion of the central action of the piece. This is one of the two possible ways of interpreting the apparently confused chronological relations of Part I, in which one is puzzled at first by the mention of men in both heaven and hell, immediately after we have been told of the expulsion of the evil angels from their heavenly home.

The second interpretation was proposed by Groschopp (Anglia 6. 261). He would consider lines 1-365 to have been made up, for the most part, by joining together the laments of the devils uttered before the Harrowing of Hell, or after the Judgment, or after their expulsion from heaven, which had previously formed portions of an extended poem on the life of Christ. Abbetmeyer also connects the laments with the Harrowing, but contends that they are to be dated after, not before, that event. The text of the poem, however, lays far too much emphasis upon the vivid recollection by Satan of his past glory, and the details of his revolt and first humiliating defeat, for it to be credible that these laments could have been uttered after the Harrowing or the Judgment, especially since absolutely no reference is made to these events as having recently occurred. We should expect the devil, after either the Harrowing or the Judgment, to have his mind occupied more with his recent disaster than with that which happened thousands of years before.

And yet it is more than probable that the part the devils play in the scene of the Descensus has influenced the poet's conception. But it is the story of the period which immediately preceded, rather than that of the period which followed, Christ's descent, which has exerted this influence. The speeches of the devils, terrified in anticipation of Christ's impending descent into hell, are an important part of the Gospel of Nicodemus, and may have colored somewhat this first section of Christ and Satan. Thus we may accept Abbetmeyer's statement (p. 13) that Satan's mention of the presence of men in heaven becomes 'clear if we assume that it is the descensus devil who is speaking, and embracing in one rueful look conditions past and present,' providing that we interpret the 'descensus devil' as the devil of the period just before the Descensus.

At any rate, a slight extension of Abbetmeyer's last clause brings us back to the first interpretation of the chronology given above. That is, we may say that, in our mundane sense, lines 1-365 have no chronology. The laments of the devils, and of Satan especially, take place in eternity, not in time. After the poet has set the stage by his short account of the fall of the apostates, he presents Satan as a character to whom past events and future prospects are as vivid as the impressions of the present; a character who can say, 'But now had I possession of all glory' (107), who can speak enviously of men as already enjoying the bliss of heaven (47), and who can characterize the date of his severer punishment in the future as 'not far off' (40)—all within sixty lines. (See Introduction, pp. xlv-xlvii and liv-lv, for a discussion of the relation of Parts I and II, a subject inextricably bound up with the question of the chronology of Part I.)

se alda. So Fragment of Sermon on Ps. 28, line 32. Cf. El. 207, Ph. 58: se ealdo feond. Cf. the ealdfeond of Ph., Gu., etc. This recalls the 'serpens antiquus' of Rev. 12. 9, and the common epithet of Latin Christian literature, 'hostis antiquus.' See Rankin's 'Study of the Kennings in A.-S. Poetry,' pp. 54-9, for lists of Latin and OE. terms for hell and devils (Jour. Eng. and Germ. Phil., Vol. 8). See also Klaeber, Anglia 35. 249-259, particularly 251, n. 4. Compare 34-5 with 160-2.

36a. eisegan. Thorpe, 'icy'! On the form of this derivative of egsa, see Sievers, Gram. 214. 2, and Bülbring, Elementarbuch 505, and especially cf. eislicum in Bouterwek's 'Ags. Glossen,' Zs. f. D. A. 9. 517 (bottom).

36b. Cf. this formula in Wand. 92; Bl. Hom. 99. 27, 31; Wulfstan, Hom. 263. 21-3.

37a. Williams (Short Extracts from OE. Poetry, p. 81) has a query concerning MS. ða þe: 'Should be changed to ðone ðe!' It seems more probable that the scribe was misled by another common meaning of þrym, according to which the phrase engla ðrym would be equivalent to 'host of angels' (see Chr. 1064), and therefore changed the simple relative þe into the plural masc. ða ('quos' in Sprachschatz) to agree with the collective idea of the phrase, as he interpreted it. I merely omit ða.

38-39b. Cf. the phrasing of 58, 103, 324, and 96, 100, 136-7.

The scribe first wrote ðeostra, but the o has been modified to e, whether by the scribe or some later corrector one cannot be sure. Since it is very doubtful that the poet intended a weak form, I have accepted the emendation (yet see 598). Compare ðeostra hám with Jul. 683; Jud. 121.

To speak in the same breath of the darkness, which is always an important feature of the descriptions of helle, and the fierceness and ubiquity of its flames was never, of course, thought to introduce any real paradox. One need not, with Becker (p. 60), see in this swearte fȳr (Ælfric, Hom. 1. 132. 16) any reminiscence of Virgil's 'lux atra.' See the descriptions in Enoch 88. 1 and 90. 24 ff. The locus classicus on this subject is Gregory's Moralia 9. 66 (Patr. Lat. 75. 914-5). Milton's 'darkness visible' will at once come to mind (P. L. 1. 61 ff.). Note, too, Gen. B 333: 'þæt wæs lēohtes lēas and wæs līges full.'

40a. Cf. 97, 322, 341, 421 (fȳr, swȳðe, hāte, þearle onǣled).

40b ff. This refers by anticipation to the severer punishment which is to come with the Harrowing of Hell (or possibly even the Last Judgment is the ende)—that is, if it refers to anything more than immediate torment, which, of course, the demons are already experiencing. I suspect some connection with the dialogue in the Gospel of Nicodemus between Satan and Inferus, in which the latter predicts that disaster will follow Christ's crucifixion. See also Isidore of Seville, De Ordine Creaturarum 8. 2 (Patr. Lat. 83. 931), where is mentioned the fear with which the devils await the time 'in quo durius judicabuntur.' Cf. P. R. 1. 52-63. Satan has no trouble in comprehending in his thought the longest periods of time, and we should not expect him to adhere strictly, in the feverish activity of his mind, to earthly chronology. Hence Grein's emendation (accepted by Toller) is wholly unnecessary.

41b. sūsel þrōwian. Cf. 395; Gen. 75; Dan. 621.

42a. The MS. wergum has occasioned much discussion. Grein at first emended it to wergung, but later accepted Dietrich's wergun, fem., = 'maledictionem.' This Cosijn considers a Kentish form of wergung, and compares with wergunge, a variant in Spelman's Ps. 87. 19. He refers to the omission of g after n in the words listed by Zupitza in Zs. f. D. A. 21. 11, but in those cases the g's are all medial, not final, which makes a great difference phonologically. Moreover, as Frings and Unwerth point out (PBB. 36. 559), the context would demand wergunge, which would disturb the metre. These scholars suggest that wergum is merely a phonetic spelling of wergm, a derivative of ðwærgan, 'throttle.' Sperber (PBB. 37. 148-9) would read wēan an (on) wergum, 'leiden bei den verdammten.' Sievers, ibid., p. 339, justly objects that on cannot have this meaning. He also disapproves of wergm, because (1) it would be a derivative of a verb itself a derivative; (2) a verbal abstract would signify an action, and not a condition, which the context requires; (3) wergum involves what he calls an unheard-of 'tonsprung,' one especially unusual for a hemistich with double alliteration. Sievers proposes wærgu or wĕrgu, an abstract derived normally from wĕrig, and meaning 'misery.' Kock (Jubilee Jaunts and Jottings, p. 72) is right in considering either wēan and wērgu (cf. the parallelism of 319-320) or wēan on wērgum (cf. El. 668) plausible. I accept wērgu. The scribe may have thought the word should be in the instrumental, and added m.

42b. See Sievers, Gram. 198. 4. a, for the omission of d in wuldres, and cf. 85ᵇ.

42b-43b. Cf. 508 and 593. Wuldres blǣd occurs in Ph. 662 and An. 535.

45a. song on swegle. So 143. Cf. Ph. 635: singað on swegle.

46a. For se Eca cf. 277, 373, 458, 532; Gen. 2368, 2897; Met. 11. 74; 20. 132.

46-47. Heleð, of course, refers to the whole host of heavenly spirits, but there can be no doubt that this host, in Satan's mind, includes the souls of men, as well as angels. For other evidence that he is throughout thinking, at least, of a time after the Fall of Man, cf. 135, 145-9, 266-273, 334. The second and third passages, which are explicit, make it certain that the poet did not intend to force a strained meaning upon heleð and men, that is, by making heleð, 'heroes,' stand here for the angel host alone, or men for 'devils' in 135. Heleð is never used of angels without qualifying circumstances. In An. 362 the angels are disguised. In El. 73 the angel in Constantine's dream is called hæleða nāthwylc, but he has been described as on weres hāde. In Gen. B 285 the devil is thinking of his angels as warlike heroes.

Moreover, the lines in Sat. are based upon the substitutional theory of the relation in which men stand to the demons, a conception universally accepted in the Middle Ages. This theory is most completely worked out by Gregory the Great. It can be traced in most of his works, but see especially his exposition of the parable of the ten drachmas (Hom. in Evang. 2. 34: Patr. Lat. 76. 1249. See also Comm. in I Reg.: Patr. Lat. 79. 214, and my note on 366). Men were created to fill the place of the order of angels which fell (see Gen. A 86 ff.; Gen. B 364 ff.; Wulfstan, Hom., p. 8). Hence naturally one of Satan's greatest torments is to see men standing round the throne where he had formerly enjoyed bliss. The contrasts between is and nā, nā and the and of 48 are very sharp. Gen. B (364-8) is more explicit:

> Þæt mē is sorga mǣst, > þæt Ādām sceal, þe wæs of eorðan geworht, > minne stronglican stōl behealdan, > wesan him on wynne, and wē þis wīte þolien, > hearm on þisse helle.

Cf. Gregory, Moralia (Patr. Lat. 76. 663): 'Valde, autem anhelat [diabolus] saeviens, quod cum ipsum ima cruciant, homo ad summa conscendat; quod in illa celsitudine subvecta caro permanet, a qua tantus ipse spiritus sine fine projectus jacet.' Heliand 1042-3 puts it thus:

> That uuas Sātānāse
> tulgo harm an is hugi, afonsta heban an-rīkies > mannō cunnea.

See also P. L. 2. 830-5; cf. 677-680 of Bk. III, which are spoken ironically.

Compare Sat. 46-8 with 220-4 and 661-3.

Milton's lines (P. L. 1. 54-6) summarize thus the feelings of Satan which underlie 42b-50:

> For now the thought
> Both of lost happiness and lasting pain > Torments him.

47b-48a. Cf., in addition to 222 and 661, Chr. 429-430 and 917-8; for wordum and wercum, Chr. 1237; Gu. 553, 765.

48b. The and has adversative force: 'and at the same time,' 'while,' 'but.'

49. bīdan in bendum. Cf. Sat. 414: beorneð on bendum; Chr.
147; Harrowing 61, 88; Gu. 545: in bendum bryne þrōwian. Christ and Satan shows the same inconsistency in regard to the restriction of the devil's movements as do the Bible and Milton. The latter speaks of his dwelling 'in Adamantine Chains' (P. L. 1. 48) and lying 'chain'd on the burning Lake' (ib. 210); yet Heaven 'left him at large to his own dark designs' (ib. 212). As Roskoff points out (op. cit. 1. 206), the Second Epistle of Peter (2. 4) says that God delivered the angels who sinned to torment 'rudentibus inferni detractos in tartarum . . . in judicium reservari,' whereas in 1 Pet. 5. 8, 'diabolus tanquam leo rugiens circuit, quærens quem devoret.' Compare, then, 49a, and the other passages in which bonds and prison are mentioned, with, e. g., 112-4, 145 ff. The poet of Gen. B seeks to avoid this paradox by having Satan carry out his designs through an envoy, whereas he says of himself (371-4):

> ac licgað mē ymbe īrenbenda, > rīdeð racentan sāl—ic eom rices lēas—, > habbað mē swā hearde helle clommas > fæste befangen.

Jude 6 and Rev. 20. 1-2 also mention the binding of demons.

49b. Cf. Gu. 626: tō þām betran hām.

30a. for oferhygdum. So 69, 197, 228; Jul. 424; Gu. 606, 633; cf. Gen. 22; Gen. B 262; Minds of Men 58. Pride has been almost exclusively the fundamental cause assigned for the fall of the angels. (For other explanations see Roskoff 1. 231.) 'Omnis peccati initium est superbia,' says Ecclus. 10. 15. See also Gregory, Moral. 28. 8 (Patr. Lat. 76. 486-7), and the description of Antichrist in 2 Thess. 2. 4.

30b. Satan's utter hopelessness (cf. 115-6, 159ᵇ) is combined with an evident wistful longing, in striking contrast with the attitude of the theological devil of Gregory, according to whom Satan remains eternally impenitent. In fact, God has given him a mad insensibility, 'ut jam per duritiam se male egisse non sentiat' (Moral. 34. 21 : Patr. Lat. 76. 741). Origen had held that the devil could better his condition. He even went so far as to regard the devil's conversion and salvation as ultimately certain. But Roskoff (1. 282) points out that such views were condemned as heresy in the sixth century by Justinian's Synod.

32a. It strikes one with surprise to read in Roskoff (1. 284) that black, a color which we assign to devils with hardly a thought, as arising from the eternal fitness of things, was probably first applied to the personal appearance of Satan in the fourth century. To be sure, devils had been called 'the powers of darkness' from the beginning, but with a moral rather than a sensuous connotation. In Rev. 12. 3, Satan is 'draco magnus, rufus.'

32b. Begrorene, in the sense of 'horridi,' 'formidolose obruiti,' 'horrore affecti,' etc., has been accepted as at least possible by Sommer, Lye, Ettmüller, Grein, Bosworth-Toller, Sweet, Clark Hall, and others. The existence of an OE. grēosan, though this is the only example of it to be found, has been assumed by lexicographers of other languages and later English, e. g., Ten Dornkaat Koolman (Wörterbuch der Ostfriesischen Sprache), Mätzner (Altenglisch Sprachproben), and NED. Dietrich was the first to doubt and emen the word. His reason, surely an insufficient one, was that, ordinaril in OE., devils are described as bound or chained in torment. Dietrich' emendation begrōwene, as Cosijn says, is unintelligible. Cosijn woul prefer sûsl begnornedon to this. But Sievers, in a note, objects tha sûsl begnornedon would give an expanded D-verse in the secon hemistich. He would prefer, 'in case of need,' behrorene (cf. W and. 77 : hrīme bihrorene), which Holthausen had already definitely proposed as an emendation of Wülker's text.

The objections to the word seem to me quite unfounded, and in fact they have not been strongly urged. The series of phenomena which we have in (for)lēosan, (for)luron : lyre (lore), ME. lure, and in the development of other verbal stems of the second class of strong verbs, is paralleled exactly by (be)grŏsan, (be)gryson : gryre, ME. grwre. Moreover, the existence of a root greu-*, grē- (extended in our word to greus-*, grus-; see NED. under grise) is abundantly testified in the Germanic dialects, exclusive of the Gothic and Scandinavian. Translated 'horrified by,' or 'in terror at their torment,' the phrase is perfectly clear. Cf. Satan's fear in 76-7. The fact that the word is ἅπαξ λεγόμενον is no unique distinction in the OE. poetical vocabulary.

53-64. Compare the reproaches which his followers heap upon fallen Lucifer in the York, Towneley, and Chester Mysteries. All this is quite foreign to the conception of the poet of Gen. B and Milton.

54. Cf. 317: 'þæt hē heofencyninge hēran ne wolde'; see also 183, 364, 595, 645. Scealdon seems to be Anglian (Sievers, Gram. 423, n. 1).

55b-56a. Cf. 107, 118, and Beow. 1727.

56b. In Gen. B 283 Satan says: 'Ic mæg wesan God swā hē.' Cf. Milton's 'He trusted to have equall'd the Most High,' P. L. 1. 40.

57a. There is no need of substituting Wieners' scyppend for scypend. The latter presents merely an orthographic variation.

57b. I am indebted to Professor Menner for what is undoubtedly the correct reading of this line. It is a reading which harmonizes with all the facts presented by the MS. as it stands. The MS. reads: nå eartŏ earm sceaŏa/:: :::. The first two erased letters, which come at the beginning of a MS. line, clearly were na. By examining the rotograph, Menner was able to decipher the other three as sum. This word fits exactly both the width of the vacant space and the traces of the erased letters which are still visible. Nå eartŏ sceaŏana sum suits the context, and is metrically unexceptionable. Paraphrase: 'Now art thou but one among the wretches fast bound in a fiery dungeon.'

Bright ('Jottings') has already suggested that 'paleographically a confusion of eartŏ and earm was possible.' What happened was this: the scribe copied eartŏ twice, reading it first correctly (and writing the more normal form eartŏ), but reading it the second time as earm; the Corrector did not recognize sceaŏa/na, divided as it was, and attempted to improve the corrupt and metrically faulty text by erasing na sum.

58a. fȳrlocan. Cf. Chr. 1621: under fīges locan (in fīges locan, Jul. 474).

58b. feste gebunden. So 104, 324; Sal. (277, 458) has faste gebindan.

59-62. Cf. Gu. 635-7.

63a. So 430ᵃ.

63-64. The traditional interpretation of lines 63-4 (for which see Ten Brink, Hist. Early Eng. Lit. I. 87; Groschopp, p. 252; Brooke, Early Eng. Lit., p. 328) takes them literally as they stand: 'that thy son was the creator of mankind.' Abbetmeyer points out (p. 14) that no parallel has been adduced to explain this idea of Satan's having one special son who could be singled out from the whole host of 'children of the devil.'

The only other interpretation which has been suggested, that by Abbetmeyer, is not very satisfactory. According to this view, these lines are to be construed as a simple inversion, and paraphrased thus: 'that the Creator of mankind was thy son, i. e., thy subject.' The difficulty here is that the equation of sunu with þegn rests upon a rather involved deduction: in Jul. 321, 522, the devil is called the fæder of his followers; elsewhere, Jul. 328, An. 43, and Sal. 117, he is their fréa, and they are his þegnas; therefore sunu here means þegn.

It seems possible that these lines contain a reference (anachronistic, of course, in the context) to a common mediæval conception of the Antichrist. Hilary (Comment. in Mt. Cap. 27: Patr. Lat. 9. 1056, 1073) twice uses the phrase 'Antichristus . . . diaboli filius' (cf. 2 Thess. 2. 3: 'filius perditionis'). Adso (ca. 954) is very circumstantial in his account of the birth of Antichrist (Libellus de Antichristo: Patr. Lat. 101. 1291 ff.): 'Et sicut in matrem Domini nostri Jesu Christi Spiritus sanctus venit, . . . ut de Spirito sancto conciperet, et quod nasceretur, divinum esset et sanctum; ita quoque diabolus in matrem Antichristi descendet, . . . ut diabolo per hominem cooperante concipiat, et quod natum fuerit totum sit iniquum, totum malum, totum perditum.' Adso then proceeds to draw a long parallel, or rather contrast, between the career of Christ and that of Antichrist. The actions of the latter he describes as directed by his father Satan. This contrast is worked out in rather minute detail, and culminates with Antichrist's exaltation of himself 'supra omne quod dicitur Deus . . . ostendens se tanquam sit Deus' (2 Thess. 2. 4). Rupertus Tuitensis, who practically reproduces Adso (Patr. Lat. 169. 1065), adds a reference to Rev. 13, according to which the Dragon (= Satan) gives his power, his throne, and great authority to the seven-headed beast (= Antichrist). This process of drawing parallels between Christ and Antichrist might very easily have been carried to such a point that, as Christ was spoken of as the creator of the world, so Satan might blasphemously say that his son Antichrist was meotod moncynnes. That the conception of Antichrist as Satan's son was known to the Anglo-Saxons is proved by passages in Wulfstan (Hom. 192 ff.). Note the following: 'Anticrist þærinne [in his temple in Jerusalem] hê gesit, and hine sylfne swā āp āhefð þæt hê cwyð þæt hê sỹ þæs ælmihtigan Godes sunu' (195. 6); 'ætēowiende hine, swylce hê God sylf sỹ' (198. 3); 'and rihtlic bið þæt se Godes wiðersaca Anticrist fealle niðer intō helle tō ðām ealdan dēofle his fæder' (201.

19).

64a. Meotod mancynnes. So 459, 515, 668.

65b. fācnum wordum. So Ps. 136. 3.

66a. Aldorðægn occurs only in Sat.; Beow. 1308; Jud. 242; Men.
130.

66b. Bouterwek's onreordadon for the MS. unreordadon is impossible, because the on-, being an inseparable prefix (cf. onseegan) could not take either ictus or alliteration, both of which it would have to bear here. Grein (Sprachschatz) correctly construes an as an adverb, and translates the phrase: 'redeten ihn an'; a and u are often confused in the MSS.

67a. Sievers (PBB. 10. 456) first objected to the MS. reading cearum, because it would give a shortened C-verse with resolution of the first arsis. He thinks cearum represents ceargum, and refers to hungrum for hungregum in the Vercelli version of Soul's Address 116. Graz would emend by Chr. 1131 and Gu. 194 to on cearum cwiðdun, whereas Kock (Plain Points and Puzzles, p. 24) retains the MS. reading. He interprets cwidum as a parallel to wordum, 65, and translates on cearum, 'in sorrow.'

The adjective cear must surely be given up as indefensible. The modification (see PBB. 19. 457) of Sievers' ceargum to cearium (see Sievers, Gram. 214. 5), accepted for the text, gives a form with six parallel strokes in a row; the scribe might easily have left one out and written cearum, as he wrote wordun for wordum in 48. The phrase, 'in sorrowful words,' is even a more satisfactory parallel to fācnum wordum than Kock's isolated cwidum. The well articulated style of Ps. 144. 4, to which Kock refers,

> Cnēorissa kynn cwidum symble > þin weorc herigen wordum georne, etc., with cwidum and wordum in consecutive lines, each accompanied by its adverb, is much more effective than the style of his arrangement of Sat. 65-7. Compare with on cearium cwidum, An. 1108: cearegan reorde.

67b. Cf. Gu. 720: 'hæfde se heorde . . . fēondas āfyrde;' also
Mk. 1. 34 (Lindisfarne): 'Dīoblas hē āfyrde' (for 'cast out devils').
We have here the first specific mention of Christ's part in the drama of the fall of the angels. Their revolt is likewise represented as against Christ in Jul. 420, Gu. 570, and Prayers 4. 55 (see Abbet-meyer, pp. 14, 15), but not so much is made of the fact as in Sat., where the motive comes in several times. In the other OE. poems the rebellion is against God. Von Gajsek (Milton und Caedmon, pp. 37-42) notes the similarity between Paradise Lost and Sat. in Christ's position in heaven, and Satan's hatred of him (see especially P. L. 5. 600 ff.). She thinks that the war in heaven between Christ and Satan is derived ultimately from the Apocalypse, and that it has been transferred by both Milton and the poet of Sat. from the last days to the period before the creation of man.

68a. drēamum bedēlde. Cf. 344; Beow. 721, 1275; Chr. 1408-9. Kock's interpretation (Jub. Jaunts, p. 30) of drēamum bedēlde as coördinate with hēo āfirde gives a stylistic effect which is a great improvement over the usually assumed participial construction. Kock's view had, however, been anticipated in Kennedy's translation.

68b-69. Cf. 228ᵇ-9; for the thought of the apostate angels surrendering, or leaving behind them, the bliss of heaven, see Gen. B 738-740; El. 946-8.

71b. The metre demands a long radical syllable in all three instances of blāc in Sat.: 71, 196, 721. One cannot be absolutely certain whether this implies that the word belongs in meaning to blāc, with the secondary sense of 'pale,' 'livid,' or, as the NED. would authorize us to believe, to blac, blæc, which is synonymous with sweart. As this latter adjective is applied to devils in Sat., it would be only natural to translate blāc also as 'black.'

For the vowel of hworfon see Sievers, Gram. 388, n. 6.

72a. Gen. B 308-9 relates that 'hēo ealle forscēop Drihten tō dēoflum.' The same thought occurs in Wulfstan, Hom. 145. 23: 'Mǣre englas . . . wurdon gēo forsceapene tō atelicum dēoflum.' In Sat., however, the participle is purely adjectival.

72b. Sievers' emendation (PBB. 10. 453) renders the hemistich a normal D-verse.

73a. This phrase in the singular is found in 448, 579, 713. It is applied to devils in Gu. 547 and Ph. 442. Schücking (Bedeutungslehre, p. 33) shows that earm by a gradual transition has come to mean 'bad,' 'wicked,' in a context such as the present one.

73b = 129ᵃ.

74. We may paraphrase: 'for the insolent deeds which they had perpetrated.' Cf. 429: for onmǣdlan.

76b. Graz shows that forworht is metrically impossible. It would have to be scanned ×–, and, hence, the line would be without alliteration. Cf. 620 for another instance of this scribal error. Grein's emendation in his text is as satisfactory as the one he suggests in his note is wholly gratuitous. Forht really improves both metre and sense. Agên is said in reference to eisegan stefne, 36, the first mention of Satan's fear. Compare 76ᵇ-80 with the introduction to Satan's speech in Gen. B 353-5.

77a. For gen. sing. ðes, see Sievers, Gram. 337, n. 4.

78a. A careful examination of the rotograph proves that Ettmüller's conjecture (see variants) was correct. OE. þ and w look very much alike. For spearcade the scribe wrote swearcade, which made no sense. Then, disregarding the alliteration, which could have guided him aright, he changed the c into a t by drawing a horizontal stroke through the top. But the little dot which forms the upper termination of the c is clearly visible above the cross of the t. Cf. 162-3: 'Word spearcum flēah āttre gelīcost, þonne hē ūt þorhdrāf.' As possible sources or analogues of this poetical image, I cite the following: Jer. 5. 14: 'Ecce ego do verba mea in ore tuo in ignem, et populum istud in ligna, et vorabit eos;' Ecclus. 48. 1: 'Et surrexit Elias propheta, quasi ignis, et verbum ipsius quasi facula ardebat;' 4 Esdras 13. 10: 'Quoniam emisit de ore suo sicut flatum ignis, et de labiis eius spiritus flammæ, et de lingua eius emittebat scintillas et tempestates;' Rev. 11. 5: 'Et si quis voluerit eis nocere, ignis exiet de ore eorum et devorabit inimicos eorum.'

80. Cf. 731: wordum in wītum.

80b. Bright would correct the metre of the MS. reading by prefixing þā or þās (Holthausen, Anglia Bb. 30. 2, adds þæt to the list) to word. Kock (Jub. Jaunts, p. 17) thinks word represents word[e], which is 'often used pleonastically with verbs of saying.' Of course, a sort of graphic elision (see note on 96ᵇ) might have caused the omission of the e. Worde gives us an abnormal hemistich, $-\times\times-$, but since word[e] indrāf makes good sense, and, since, though metrically exceptional, it is not unparalleled, I accept it for the text. Besides, inasmuch as indrīfan occurs in this line only, it might be better to regard in as an adv., and scan the verse $-\times- \mid -$, which would approximate the metre of Beow. 2436ᵇ.

81a. iū in heofnum: so 151ᵃ.

81b. hālig ængel. So 586 (= Christ).

81-82a. Gregory describes at length Lucifer's preëminence in heaven in Hom. in Evang. 34 (Patr. Lat. 76. 1250) and Moral. 32. 23 (Patr. Lat. 76. 664-5).

82a. Wülker notes that Dryhten is used for the dative. Cf. Gen. B 261: Dēore was hē Drihtne ūrum; Gen. B 339-340: his Hearran lēof, Drihtne dȳre; Gen. A 1247: Drihtne dȳre.

82b. Cf. Chr. 1637: āgan drēam mid Gode.

83b. swā some. Cf. Gen. 399; Chr. 940.

84-87. The same idea recurs in 173-5.

85b. Cf. Heb. 1, 3: 'splendor gloriæ.'

86b-87a. Cf. 253ᵇ-4ᵃ. The phrase tō ðhīte is peculiar to Satan, and occurs in 117, 254, 279, 454.

87b. There is no need to assume (i. e., accepting, for the moment, the MS. form ðēos) merely from this line that the gender of hēap may vary (see B.-T. and Sprachschatz). Sievers, Gram. 338, n. 4, records a masculine þēos. But in any case the o of ðēos has been erased, and the form was probably a slip. For nom. sing. masc. adjectives in -e in the weak declension, such as earme, see Sievers, Gram. 276, n. 5.

88. Cf. 92, 148, 178.

89a. I omit the Corrector's ge. Wülker remarks in a note that wēne here may represent wēne ic, and I so interpret it.

Lines 89-90 are very confused as they stand in the MS. I read and scan them thus:

$$\acute{-} \times \mid \times \acute{-} \mid \ \acute{\smile} \times \parallel \times \times \times \mid \acute{-} \ \ \times \times \mid \acute{-} \ \ \times$$
Wēne þæt tācen sutol   þā ic āseald wes on wærgðu.

This is an expanded long line ('schwellvers'). The rhythm of the first hemistich is the same as that of Dan. 446 (Kaluza's Type 64, Eng. Stud. 21, 373). I scan tācen as a monosyllable in accordance with the customary practise of the poet (see Richter, Chronologische Studien zur Ags. Lit., p. 34). The second hemistich is perfectly normal for the second member of a schwellvers. 89-91 may be translated as follows: 'I think that a clear sign (i. e., of our fate) when I was given over to punishment, down beneath the ground in the yawning abyss.' This reading is proposed with no pretensions that it restores the original text, but as giving a satisfactory line with a minimum of change from the MS. I merely cancel of, and alter the position of MS. 7 (ond) wærgðu, which may be considered a natural misreading of on wærgðu. See textual footnote on 105 for an instance of the same mistake. Previous attempts at reconstruction have been either too elaborate, or metrically faulty, or have left the phrase and wærgðu in a hemistich by itself, without explaining its import or construction.

The way in which tācen sutol is employed here reminds one a little of Beow. 833-4.

92b. Forms of the verb ferian with æ for radical vowel (see variants) are to be found. The original reading might have been gefærde. To the Corrector is almost certainly to be assigned the erasure of the a, although it is always barely possible in such cases that the scribe himself did the normalizing.

93b. Cf. An. 1681: tīr ēadigra.

94a. Ziegler (Der Poetische Sprachgebrauch in den sogen. Cædmonschen Dichtungen, p. 28) thinks that wloncra winsele is derived from a common epithet descriptive of Valhalla, and that it means 'der tapferen bewirtungssaal.'

94b. Cf. Rood 133.

95a. Cf. 167; engla þreatas occurs in 424 and 568.

95b. There is real need this time of the subject, wē, with which the Corrector supplies mōten.

96b-97a. Cf. 100. Fȳr for fȳre seems to be an instance of graphic elision; cf. word indrāf, 80. I call it 'graphic,' because, although we do not know how far elision was carried out in OE. enunciation, it would be very natural for a scribe carrying a phrase in his head, without being conscious of its meaning, to omit the weak inflectional e from his MS. But whether this be considered a case of elision or not, there are plenty of instances recorded of uninflected datives and instrumentals. The meaning is unmistakable, and the metre correct; hence fȳr has been allowed to stand.

97b. fāh wið God. So Beow. 811; An. 1188.

98a. helle duru. Cf. 380, 467, 723. Graz's objections to the metre are not damaging. (Holthausen accepts these objections in Eng. Stud. 37. 205.)

98-99. Becker (p. 62) thinks 'the fire-breathing dragons which guard the entrance to hell . . . are certainly a reminiscence of the Cerberus myth or its concomitants, with perhaps an admixture of the Germanic dragons.' But it is probable that the source is a more immediate one, i. e., Jewish or Christian apocryphal writings; for example, we read in the Slavonic Book of the Secrets of Enoch 42. 1 of 'key-holders and guards of the gates of hell standing, like great serpents, and their faces like extinguished lamps, and their eyes of fire.'

99a. reðre. The omission of the h in this and the other four instances (208b, 456b, 489a, 717) is merely graphic, and nothing can be argued from it as to an early date (see Groschopp, pp. 266-7; Sievers, Gram. 217, n. 2 and n. 3; Bülbring, Elementarbuch 480, n.). There are exactly five cases of the same phenomenon in the MS. of the Phœnix, which no one considers an early poem.

100. Cf. the phrasing of 137.

101a. See Shipley, Genitive Case in A.-S. Poetry, p. 48, for the construction.

101-102. Cf. the similar idea in 130-1. These lines remind one of the terror of men before the Judgment in Rev. 6. 16: 'Et dicunt montibus et petris: Cadite super nos, et abscondite nos a facie sedentis super thronum.'

102a. Cf. 180, 446. Mist and fumes are common features of hell. Gregory speaks of its 'aer caliginosus' (Moral. 13. 48).

103b-104a. Ex. 536 says that in hell 'þǣr bið fȳr and wyrm.' Sal. 468 mentions wyrmgeardas, which expresses the same idea as the phrase wyrmas gewunade. Cf. also Jud. 119, wyrmsele. The participle gewunad is used similarly in Ps. 139. 3; prose Life of Gu. 142. 23.

103b. Wites clom is found in 157, 444, and 453, and nowhere else in the poetry. For the possibility of a masc. þis, see Sievers, Grammar 338, n. 4.

105a. dimme and deorce. Cf. 455; Ps. 108. 8. The damned are called þǣre deorcan scole in Chr. 1523.

105b. Lȳhteð has been written (almost certainly by the Corrector) over the erasure of a word that cannot be deciphered. An e can be discerned after dæg and what looks like another e under the h. The last letter was d. I suspect that the line originally read nis hē dægrēd, a faulty hemistich. This form of dægrēd is found in prose. The Corrector's reading is satisfactory, and recalls Dan. 158, and especially Dom. 19-20: 'þǣr nǣfre dæg scineð lēohte of lyfte.'

106a. Cf. æfter sceades sclman, Sal. 116. Sclma seems to be one of those twilight words which may mean either light or dark.

107a-110. The Corrector's ic may be dispensed with, as well as Thorpe's emendation of nð to ið. Satan's memory of his lost happiness is so vivid that he can say (literally): 'But now had I possession of all glory; whereas I was forced to abide whatever God wills to condemn me to, his enemy on hell's floor.' Retention of the MS. reading removes the occasion for Sievers' note in PBB. 10. 195, in which he argues that the alliteration of ið (gēo) with ealles points to Kentish origin. Frings (p. 232) accepts ið, but splits the sentence in two by a period after wuldres. This, of course, causes ið to lose its emphasis, and hence its alliteration. But then, there is no necessity of accepting ið. Grein's rendering,

> Einst hatte ich Gewalt über all die Glorie, > eh ich in dieser heillosen Heimat harren musste, > was mir Gott der Herr nun geben wolle, etc., is no more forceful than can be made from the MS. as it stands.

If Thorpe's translation of 110ᵃ, 'on his glittering floor,' were to be accepted, the phrase would have to apply to the position of God, which it surely does not. Neither 'glittering' nor 'variegated' seems a suitable epithet for the floor of hell. Fāgum fits into the context best as a modifier of mē.

Bosworth-Toller has other instances of dat. flōra.

108. Cf. 327ᵇ, atolan ōðles.

109. Cf. the phrasing of 622-3.

110b. On this 'predicative infinitive with a verb of motion,' see Callaway's Infin. in A.-S., pp. 89-91, 291. Cf. Dan. 698; Gen. 852, 2759; Jud. 12.

111a. Following Hofer (Dat. und Instrum. bei Cædmon, p. 32) I construe menego as an instance of the instrumental of accompaniment. Cf. 729, dēofla mænego.

111b. Cf. þone dimman hām, 337.

112. Graz's transposition of flyge and flyhte both avoids anacrusis in the second hemistich and greatly improves the rhythm of the first. Such a mistake as misplacing these similar words would be very natural.

112-113. See the notes on 262ᵇ-5 for an explanation of these lines. I take earda here to mean not the devils' 'solum nativum' or 'patria' (Sprachschatz), but rather the 'lands' of earth, where the fiends will carry out the baleful designs against men which are mentioned in 147-9 and elsewhere.

114a. For ðes see Sievers, Gram. 337, n. 3, 4.

114b. For ord onstaldon see Beow. 2407 (se ðæs orleges ōr onstealde) and Rid. 4. 59.

115-117. Cf. the phrasing of 277-9. Sat. 525 and Gen. 1840 have swā hē ǣr dyde.

116-117. Ferrell (Teuton. Antiquities in the A.-S. Genesis, p. 13) thinks the conception of heaven as a hereditary home (ēðel) Teutonic (but cf. Lat. 'patria'). He then says most aptly that because of the universal Teutonic attachment to home it would be considered the greatest of punishments to deprive the devils of this heavenly home, theirs by inheritance, as it were. Such a feeling must have prompted the poet to put this despairing cry into the mouth of Satan.

119a. Cosijn thinks wuldres and wīta equivalent to 'über himmel und hölle.'

119b. Waldendes Sunu. Cf. 396; Chr. 635.

120a. Cf. Gu. 425, hēan and earm. It seems necessary here to avail ourselves of the Corrector's sceal.

120-122. Cf. the curse of Adam, Gen. A 927-930; also An. 676-7:

> Hwæt! gē syndon earme ofer ealle menn, > wadað widlāstas.

Abbetmeyer (p. 15) lists the poetical passages in which the devils are called exiles, or the penalty of banishment from heaven mentioned. He thinks there may be some connection between these conceptions and Gen. 4. 11-2, where Cain is condemned to be 'vagus et profugus super terram.'

121b. Cf. Gu. 116 and An. 1618: wuldre bescyrede.

122a. duguðum bedæled. So Gen. A 930; Chr. 363. Compare 121ᵇ-2ᵃ with 343ᵇ-4ᵃ.

123a. uppe mid englum. So 142, 293, 330, 301, 591; Chr. 587; Ph. 629; Hymn 5, etc.

126a. Cf. wērige gāstas, 630, 731.

126-127. Cf. Jul. 494-6: Ic āsecgan ne mæg . . . sāl þā earfeþu.

127b = Ps. 148. 12 (2ᵇ). Cf. 526: ætsomne ealle.

128a. Cf. 479-480: stōnd in firenum fāh is æghwæðr.

128b-129. These lines are parallel to 78 and 162; that is, they refer to the emission of fire which accompanied Satan's words. Compare the similar use of stondan to depict vividly the streaming of light and flame in Beow. 726, 1570, 2769.

129b. Cf. Gu. 640: ād inæled āttre geblonden.

131b. Cf. 157: 'gewundod mid wommum. The figure of sin's causing wounds, seems, according to Cook (note on Rood 14ᵃ), to be peculiarly Cynewulfian. It certainly appears in no poem of the Cædmonian group.

132. Cf. 335. It was for long assumed that the inclusion in OE. poetry of extreme cold among the torments of hell, alongside of the usual ignis gehennæ, was due to a reminiscence of the old Teutonic Niflheim, the cold and misty abode of the dead (see e. g., Ferrell, p. 24). This notion was first moderately opposed by Becker (pp. 11, 54-9). Cook (note on Chr. 1546, q. v. for some references not repeated here) thinks the ultimate source of the combination of these two modes of torment is Job 24. 19: 'Ad nimium calorem transeat ab aquis nivium' (see Bede on Luke 13. 28). Enoch 14. 13 describes the outer court of God's palace thus: 'And I entered into that house, and it was hot as fire and cold as ice: there were no delights of life therein.' In the Book of the Secrets of Enoch (Version A, 10. 2) hell is described as a place of 'cruel darkness and unillumined gloom, and there is no light there, but murky fire constantly flameth aloft, . . . and everywhere there is frost and ice, thirst and shivering.' Ephraem Syrus mentions both 'frigidus tartarus' and 'ignis inextinguibilis.' Bede's famous picture of purgatory in the vision of Dryhthelm (Hist. Eccles. 5. 12), according to which the souls leaped back and forth from one place 'flammis ferventibus nimium terribile' to another 'furenti grandine ac frigore nivium omnia perflante atque verrente non minus intolerabile,' need not be quoted in full. Milton's lines (P. L. 2, 587-603) on this alternating torment will come to mind at once. In OE. poetry it is mentioned in Gen. A 43: 'geondfolen fyre and færcyle'; Chr. 1547: 'æleð hý mid þý ealdan lige ond mid þý egsan forste'; and Gen. B 313-6 (cf. Adam's speech, 806-812).

Sal. 467 calls hell wælcealde wíc wintre bepeahte. I give three passages from the homilists: Bl. Hom., p. 61: 'Þǣr hē hæfþ weallendene lēg, and hwīlum cyle þone grimmestan;' the eighth Vercelli hom., fol. 60ᵇ: 'Þǣr is unmǣte cyle and unāhefendlic hǣto gemēted;' Ælfric, Hom. 1. 132, has the phrases, on ðām micclum bryne, on swīðlicum cyle. Cf. also Ælfric, Hom. 1. 530, 532; Wulfstan, Hom. 138. 27 ff.

It is therefore wholly unnecessary to see in the OE. passages any direct influence of old pagan ideas, but we may at least say that the torment of extreme cold had rather a stronger hold upon the imagination of the northern race of Englishmen than upon that of more southerly peoples.

134. Cf. Gu. 400: 'Bonan gnornedon, mǣndon murnende.'

135b-136a. As they stand in the MS., these lines would have to mean either, 'naked men fight over serpents' (Kennedy's 'strive with serpents' is impossible, because the object of ymb when used with verbs like winnan is always the subject of dispute, never one of the antagonists; cf. Beow. 506-7: sē þe wið Brecan wunne, on sīdne sǣ ymb sund flite; also Bl. Hom. 99. 10: ūs is myccle māre nēdþearf þæt wē winnon ymb ūre sāule þearfe); or, 'naked men fight around serpents (or dragons)'; or, 'serpents fight round about ('rings um') naked men' (Bouterwek). The latter is certainly the only interpretation which is tolerable. But better than all is it to follow Thorpe's suggestion that winnan is an error for windan, a very simple mistake, and especially natural because winnan and ymb occur so often together. Grein retains winnað in his text, but bases his translation on windað: 'bald um nackte Männer winden sich hier Würmer.'

Compare the picture in Apoc. of Peter, verse 10: 'And I saw the murderers . . . cast into a certain narrow place full of evil reptiles, and being smitten by those beasts;' also that in the homily in MS. Hatton 116 (printed by Förster in Festschrift für Lorenz Morsbach, pp. 128-137), 135. 19: 'ac ā þā dracan and þā wyrmas þāra ārlēasra manna sāwla slītað.' Cf. Jud. 115: 'wyrmum bewunden'; Minds of Men 56: 'wyrmum beþrungen'; Wulfstan, Hom. 139. 10: 'hī wælgrimme wyrmas slītað.'

136b. Cf. windsele, 320, 386.

137a. Cf. Gu. 1291-4: 'blissum gefylled . . . eal innanweard.'

137b. Though an adv. (fægere) is once used with fyllan, it seems better to construe atole here as a substantive. We have a clear case of the substantive in 395. This use of atol is peculiar to Sat., if Cook's atolcarfoða is to be accepted for Chr. 1265.

138b-139a. Cf. Gu. 191: ne mōtun hī on eorþan eardes brūcan; Gu. 353: fǣgran botles brūceð; and Dom. 90: brūcan þæs boldes.

139-140. Cf. 170. This use of gesceaft, modified by beorhtan, m&rou, or ícan, specifically for the heavenly creation, i. e., heaven, is found in 560, 664; Gen. 93; Gu. 749; El. 1088; Ph. 660.

141a. The Corrector has changed the a of wyras to æ. Sievers, Gram. 276, n. 5, records a weak neuter substantive in -a; and the same inflection may have here crept into the weak adjective (unless wyras is a mere blunder).

141b. wuldres léoht. So 253, 449, 556, 617, 650.

141-145. An OE. variation upon the theme of 'sorrow's crown of sorrow.'

143-145. Kennedy: 'where blessed souls are lapped in music by the Son of God'! As far as sense is concerned, it is possible to retain the éadigne of the MS., construing it, after Ettmüller, as a modifier of sunu (bearn being neut.), and to translate with Grein: 'wo den Sohn des Schöpfers den seligen die Kinder selber haben all mit Sang umfangen.' Graz objects to scanning habbað as anacrusis, as in habbað éadigne bearn. Whether his objection is valid or not, it must be admitted that the retention of éadigne renders the progress of thought broken, and the rhythm unbearably jerky. The passage can be greatly improved if we read éadige bearn and interpret these 'blessed children' to be the same as the æðele heleð of 45-6, that is, the host of good angels and of the men who have been admitted to the joys of heaven. Against these Satan's envy has already (loc. cit.) burst forth. This interpretation of the company of éadige bearn as composed of men in part, or even exclusively, gives especial point to the lines immediately following. Satan's state of mind is clearly revealed also by 266-7:

$$\times \ \times | \ \stackrel{-}{-} \ \stackrel{-}{-} \ \times | \ \stackrel{-}{-}$$

> Ne mōt hē þām sāwlum þe ðǣr sēcað ūp > ēadige of eorþan ǣfre gerinan.

He sees men enjoying the bliss that was his, and more of them, too, mounting up to enter into it; yet he cannot harm or hinder the righteous, though he dearly longs to seize them, but must content himself with those 'þe hē tō āgan nyle.' The redeemed are continually called éadige. Seolfa is here nom. plur. masc.; cf. Ps. Cott. 108. Translate: 'where [God's] happy children have surrounded the Son of the Creator with their songs.' The situation is the same as that portrayed in 46-8, 220-4, and 661-3.

146a. Grein's þāra æfæstra suits the context well, but, as neither æ nor æfæst occurs elsewhere in Sat., and as the latter is a relatively rare word, and found almost exclusively in the older poems, it is better to follow up Barnouw's suggestion (Textkritische Untersuchungen, p. 104) and insert 356b as 146a, to fill the gap. Translate:

'Nor can I harm any of the souls who ascend from the earth, but rather only those whom He will not have.'

147. tō āgan. It is difficult to see why a simple uninflected infinitive as object of tō should have inspired so many emendations. Cf. Sievers, Gram. 363, n. 3. Sievers is right in asking whether one could find another so precise expression as 'nicht zu eigen wollen,' and his alternative suggestion (see textual footnote) that tō may be anticipated from the next line is unnecessary. Cosijn's tō āgen is impossible.

148. Cf. 92. þā here is emphatic.

149a. Jul. 114 employs bringan tō bolde for 'to marry' (cf. Lat. domum ducere).

150-152. This recalls P. L. 1. 83-6:

> If thou beest he; but O how fall'n! how chang'd
> From him, who in the happy Realms of Light > Cloth'd with transcendent brightness didst outshine > Myriads though bright.

Thorpe renders the anacoluthon satisfactorily: 'unlike to what we were when we, etc.'

152b. Grein's reading, wuldres swēg (cf. 237), both fills out the hemistich and supplies an object to brōhton which suits the context (see 155b-6a).

153. The phrase bringan tō bearme, 'proffer,' 'give,' is found in lines 153, 357, and 672, but nowhere else in OE. Beow. 2404 has him tō bearme cwōm, while in Lk. 6. 38 (Lindisfarne) 'Hīa sellað on bearm īuer' merely translates the Lat.: 'dabunt in sinum vestrum.' Cf. also Beow. 1144: on bearm dyde; Beow. 2194: on . . . bearm ālegde. The lap or bosom was figuratively represented as the seat of possession in several languages. Thus in Ps. 78. 12 the Lord is adjured to pay back the injuries which Israel's neighbors have done him seven times 'in sinu eorum.' Cf. Ps. 89. 51; Prov. 17. 23; Isa. 65. 6, 7; Jer. 32. 18; and see also Livy 21. 18. 10, and Horace, Sat. 2. 3. 172. Among the Hebrews and Romans this manner of speaking was derived from the custom of carrying articles in the loose folds of the upper garment. Heyne (Glossary to the Heliand) says: 'Das legen oder setzen in den schoss war das symbol der eigentumsübertragung.' He interprets Heliand 1104 (ef thu . . . bedōs te minun barma) thus: 'wenn du . . . mich als lehnsherr anerkennst.' Kock (Jub. Jaunts, p. 69) says that tō bearme bringan requires a dative. In 672 we have brōhte him tō bearme, but in 357 no indirect object can be discovered, and we should have to emend 357 to bringað

[him] tō bearme, if this requirement were absolute. It is probable that the phrase had become so stereotyped that it could mean 'offer,' 'proffer,' 'bring,' and that the indirect object was optional. Hence, it is not necessary to construe bearn as dat. (= Christ); it may be nom. plur.: 'We, the Saviour's (or better, the Lord's) children.' Kock's interpretation of 153 is, however, equally satisfactory. Bearn might be a Northern uninflected dative.

154-156. At first blush, Bouterwek's emendation, lēoðu, seems to give these lines the most suitable meaning: 'where, surrounding Him, we all raised our songs, sang hymns of praise to the Lord.' However, lēoðu, notwithstanding that it involves only a slight change in the MS. reading, is objectionable, for it would have to be considered an abnormal LWS. plural form. And, although it is a trifle awkward, we may retain the MS. leomu without giving it such a fantastic interpretation as that of Kock (Jub. Jaunts, p. 69). He would translate: 'lifted our wings,' a phrase which might have delighted the later Middle Ages, but one which distorts the meaning of leomu. So far as I can discover, lim is never applied to wings alone, although, in one or two cases relating to birds, wings are to be included under the term. Numerous examples, however, could be adduced to show that lim was commonly used in OE., as its equivalent was in other languages (cf. Gregory, Hom. in Evang. 21: Patr. Lat. 76. 1172: 'Si ergo membra nostri Redemptoris sumus'), to denote beings who were subordinate to one head. Its use is even painfully specific at times: Prayers 4. 51-2: 'ne lǣt þū mec nǣfre dēofol se þēah, þīn lim lǣdan on lāðne sīð;' cf. also Bl. Hom., p. 33: 'Unrihtwīse syndon dēofles leomo.' Moreover, 'we lifted our songs' is a natural and common expression (cf. Ex. 276, 574; Dan. 543; Jul. 693; El. 889), whereas 'we raised (or lifted) our wings' gives a ludicrous picture if we take it as a single movement, or is very feeble if it is intended to represent 'flew' or 'circled in flight.' But, æsthetic judgments aside, the parallels for both leomu = 'members,' 'servants,' and hebban plus some word for 'song' or 'praise' show what was certainly the intended meaning.

For Lēofne = Christ, cf. Ph. 561.

156b. Cf. 186: indǣdum fāh. Compare 156b-7a with Rood 13: 'and ic synnum fāh, forwunded mid wommum.'

159a. So 281a. Cf. An. 1186: 'bǣles cwealm hātne in helle.'

159b. Jud. 121: hyhtwynna lēas.

160. The prosodists agree that the first hemistich is faulty in the MS., being a shortened C-verse with resolution of the first arsis. Moreover, the attempts of early scholars to explain the MS. reading are unsatisfactory. Bouterwek's herede, pret. of herigan, 'praise,'

'celebrate,' Dietrich's hevede, 'clamavit,' and the same scholar's interpretation of firno as equivalent to se firno, 'der verbrecherische,' are all more than doubtful, even were the metre correct. Rieger's happy solution of the difficulty has been accepted by all later scholars save Wülker. The identical phrase, fyrena hyrde (used of Grendel), occurs in Beow. 750; in Gu. 522 the devils are called synna hyrdas.

Cosijn remarks: 'mit seinem cwidum am rande beweist der "cor-rector" seine nichtswürdigkeit'; and in general we may agree with him.

161. Cf. 579. The devil is called atol ægláca in El. 901; An. 1312.

162. witum wérig. Cf. 343, 428, 449. The phrase is not found elsewhere in the poetry.

162b-163a. Ziegler (*Der Poetische Sprachgebrauch in den sogen.
Cædmonschen Dichtungen,* p. 166) says: 'Nicht wort und eitergift sind hier verglichen, sondern funken und eitergift, die beide durch-mengt das wort in gleicher weise verderblich, giftig, machen.' This seems confirmed by 78-9 and 128-9.

164 ff. Wülker (Gesch. der Engl. Litt. 1. 62) considers such speeches as this incompatible with Satan's character. He was probably thinking of the Satan of Paradise Lost and Genesis B;
but this is unfair, because the whole of our poem, as well as other mediæval documents, shows that the conception of a disillusioned elegiac Satan grew up alongside that of a grandiose and inflexible epic Satan.

168. Ealles—dréames = 182. Cf. also 330.

169. Cf. 437: ræhte þá mid handum.

171-172. Cf. the similar thought in 327-8.

172b. bêman stefne. So 238. Cf. Dan. 179; Ph. 497; Chr. 1062.

173-174. Cf. 187 and 256-7; also 201. Graz notes that the normal metre demands some short word before Sunu to complete the line;
cf. 143, 529.

176. Holthausen's emendation, habban môste, certainly improves the alliteration. Yet as personal pronouns do sometimes, even though very rarely, alliterate (cf. Rieger, Zs. f. D. Phil. 7. 30, and Chr. 1313), it is safer to leave the line unchanged. Bright's suggestion that we read þone þe, construed as referring back to Sunu Meotodes in 173, and interpret Drihten—gelamp as a larger parenthesis, within which mê þær wyrse gelamp forms a smaller parenthesis, as he says, would gain for us a 'well-wrought stylistic period and [he adds with reference to 643] the clear expression of a thought to which the poet, in his well-marked manner, returns for a second application.' The similarity to 643 is indeed close. Yet Bright's pointing seems to give a period that is rather over-wrought than well-wrought, for the involved parentheses completely break the continuity. Besides, Bright's feeling that the connection between 176 and 175ᵇ is obscure does not seem justified. Translated 'worse befell me in that [enterprise] than I might have had in expectation [i. e., had I remained faithful],' the passage is clear enough.

179. Cf. Met. 15. 9: ne mæg ic þeah gehycgan hwý him, etc.

The alliteration of such a line as 179 may well inspire doubts of its purity. Grein's þæm = þeam from OHG. doum, 'vapor,' was a mere guess. Bouterwek's rendering of in ðæm, 'während dessen,' does not give a good meaning. If we must resort to emendation, Graz's in þæt hám is most satisfactory, in spite of the repetition of hám in consecutive lines. As far as the meaning is concerned, however, the line can be made intelligible as it stands, if we construe hám in 178 as the antecedent of ðæm, and paraphrase: 'Nor can I understand how I came to be there (i. e., in the home I just mentioned).' We can infer from Satan's admission in 181-3 that he is referring here not to the method by which he was thrust into hell, but to his own folly in ever allowing such an event to take place.

180b. Bouterwek's clever emendation, niðsynnum for mid synnum, provides the needed alliteration with a minimum of textual alteration. His word is not found elsewhere, but nið is used to form compounds perfectly analogous to it.

181a. Grein's emendation, wuldre for worulde, is very plausible. The same emendation was proposed by Klaeber for Ph. 386, where, indeed, it is practically indispensable to the context. Here we can retain worulde, interpreted as the whole universe aside from hell. The poet may intend to imply that hell is to be thought of as outside the limits of the real universe of God. This woruld would then be the same as that which Satan is said to have believed he possessed (see 59).

Cf. the phrases in 669: ðworpen wæs of heofonum; Sal. 462: ðweorp hine ða of ðám wuldre; also Gen. B 300, 304, 342; El. 761.

181b. The þ added by the Corrector at the right hand margin is wholly unnecessary.

182b. Gen. sing. dreamas occurs also in Dan. 30, 115.

183. Cf. 317.

184a. Meotode cwēman. Cf. 305, 596, 655; Gu. 277; Jul. 252; Creed 58.

184b-185. Kock's interpretation (Jub. Jaunts, p. 70) of þæt morðer as parallel to wēan and wītu and wrace gives a satisfactory meaning, and involves only a slight change in the text.

185. Cf. the series in 336; also wēan and wītu, 715. Wēan and wītu is found only in Sat.

188a. weoroda Waldend. So 253, 564.

189b. Sides is probably a mere slip. The d might theoretically have derived from a very old MS., but it would be the only instance in Sat. of this orthographic phenomenon (see Sievers, Gram. 199, n. 1). The frequent collocation of síd and wíd probably caused the scribe to write sídas for síðas. For síðas wíde cf. Gen. 905; Beow. 877.

190-193. Groschopp (p. 252) thinks these lines chronologically inconsistent, because from earlier passages we know that Satan has already been in hell. Abbetmeyer (p. 11) considers them omitted after 33 by scribal oversight, and later inserted at this point. But it is not necessary to draw such conclusions. Both of these scholars have failed to notice the relation of lines 190-3 to those which follow. They are introductory to the first of the poet's long didactic passages, and give in a very proper place a summary of the fate of the fallen angels as a foil to set off both the description of the joys of heaven and the exhortations in which we are urged to strive to enter into these joys. The lines begin a new section, and do not refer to the words just preceding. Þa in 190 is purely resumptive; it does not signify any definite time. We may paraphrase: 'God's foe, then, went to hell when he was humbled; so did his followers . . . when God drove them into that dwelling which is called Hell. Wherefore every man must be mindful, etc.'

Cf. Jud. 112: gǽst ellor hwearf, under neowelne nǽs and ðǽr genyðerad wǽs; Gu. 569: sē ēow gehȳnde and in hǽft bidrāf; Gen. B 746: ās on helle bedrāf.

190a. So 400ᵃ.

191a. Godes andsaca. See 269, 280, 340, 719; Gen. B 442; Ex. 502.

192b. For the existence of acc. plur. hē, see Sievers, Gram. 334, n. 3.

194-195. Cf. 283-5 and Wonders of Creat. 98. The tone of the exhortations in Sat. may well be compared with Chr. 429-439.

195a. ābelige. It is not necessary to assume with the dictionaries a special weak infinitive ābeligan for this form (or ābǽligan for the ābǽlige which first stood in the text; on the stem-vowel of ābǽlige see Luick, Hist. Gram. d. Engl. Spr. 188. 1; 366. 1). Sievers, Gram. 213, n., says: 'For (palatal) g after r, l the digraph ig is not infrequently employed when the combination is preceded by y, e, or i, especially in later texts.' He cites the WS. third sing. ǽbyligð for ǽbylgð. Hence, ābelige may be merely a graphic variant of ābelge.

195b. So 577ᵇ.

198b. Cf. 581: Drihten weoroda.

199a. There is no support to be found for an adj. ǽp, which previous editors have accepted (see p. 137). The scribe evidently miscopied uppe as MS. ǽpne because of the immediately following ēcne. For ēcne gefēan see Gu. 1052, 1159, 1345; Chr. 159, 743; Men. 173.

200a. On the form of gecȳdde see Sievers, Gram. 405. 2.

200b. The mægencræft of the MS. looks very much like a conflate reading, unless we are to take it as an addition made by the scribe subconsciously. Mægen may have been in the scribe's copy a gloss intended to indicate that cræft is to be interpreted as 'power,' not 'skill' or 'cunning,' whereas the scribe took the two together as the compound substantive mægencræft. At any rate, the compound is metrically impossible.

Compare 200 with Gloria 16, 53.

203-204. The pointing of these lines has been very puzzling, and the meaning also is somewhat confused. The first attempts to set things to rights consisted in prefixing to cēosan some word which would alliterate with eard. If lines 203 and 204 are considered by themselves, this is legitimate. But when one notices that we have a schwellvers in both 202 and 205, one cannot help suspecting that that which intervenes was also originally a schwellvers. Schmitz (Die Sechstakter in der Ae. Dichtung, p. 9) says that 203-4 cannot be united into an expanded long line. This is true—as the lines stand in the MS. Graz and Kaluza merely printed them continuously as one schwellvers, but the result is a metrical monstrosity. Yet a very little emendation of the most inoffensive sort gives us a normal expanded line. The two phrases in wuldre are separated by exactly one MS. line. This is what happened: in the scribe's copy, in wuldre (the second of the two in our MS.) stood just after ēcne, but in the line below it. The scribe simply wrote straight along ēcne in wuldre, and, as he probably interpreted ēcne as a modifier of Drihten, the phrase as he wrote it suited the context perfectly. He then copied the following line correctly, with in wuldre in its proper place.

The only change necessary, aside from omitting this obvious dittograph, is the substitution of l for the r of alra, since mid never takes the genitive. Ēcne, of course, modifies eard. We may scan the line:

$$\acute{-} \times \times | \acute{-} \times \times | \acute{-} \times | | \times \times \times | \acute{-} \quad \times | \quad \acute{-} \times$$
ēcne mid alla gescefta cēosan ūs eard in wuldre;

and translate: 'Let us, with all creatures, choose an eternal dwelling-place in glory with the King of all kings, who is called Christ.'

203. Cf. Gen. 1927: 'Him þā eard gecēas.'

205. ealra cyninga Cyninge. Cf. Chr. 136, 215; An. 978, etc.

The phrase derives from the scriptural Rex regum, Rev. 17. 14, and elsewhere. There is no valid reason for emending to cyning.

206. Cf. Gu. 770: berað in breostum beorhtne geleafan; Father's Instruction 44: þurh blðne geþoht. Cf. also Harrowing 96-7.

207b. This common phrase, soð and riht, recalls the vera et justa of Rev. 16. 7. Cf. also Gen. 21; Gu. 782; Chr. 700; Beow. 1700; Ps. 111. 6; Pater Noster 3. 75.

210-213. The translators, with the exception of Kennedy, have misinterpreted this passage. The word wlite is the chief cause of the trouble. It was thought to refer to land; whereas there is a shift in the thought to a different subject after geseceð, and hence wlite must refer to the subject of wunað. Grein's translation will illustrate the older view: 'Das bedarf der einst, wer hier auf Erden wohnet . . . dass ihm in Wonneglanz erscheine, wenn er aufsucht wieder das andere Leben, ein weit angenehmer Land als diese Erde sei.' The distortion in the rendering of behofað which this interpretation necessitates is final proof that it is unsound. Behofian has, in addition to the meaning 'need,' that of 'must,' 'needs must,' but the necessity involved is never that of external circumstances; rather it springs from some personal need or from moral obligation. It cannot at all be equated with necesse est. Lines 210-2 are a continuation of the exhortation, and it is only in the words, þonne he oðer lif eft geseceð (which are parallel to 208-9), that the transition to the actual description of heaven appears. We may either interpret wlite, with Kennedy and Kock (Jub. Jaunts, p. 70), to mean 'in beauty' (cf. El. 1318), or take it concretely as 'countenance.' According to Eccl. 8. 1, 'Sapientia hominis lucet in vultu eius,' and the shining of the countenance of righteous beings, both human and divine, is to be found throughout the Bible. The parallel in Chr. 1077 is close: 'Ðonne beoð bealde þa þe beorhtne wlite Meotude bringað.' Both in Sat. and Chr. the more general sense probably suits the context better. Him is dat. of reference. (If wlite is interpreted as 'countenance,' him will practically signify possession.)

The passage may be paraphrased thus: 'He who has dwelt here amid earth's joys must needs shine in beauty when he seeks that other life.' Compare the references to the beauty of the good man's soul after it leaves its earthly dwelling, in Gu. 1277-8; Chr. 1058-9; Soul's Address 139-141. Exhortations to be mindful of our soul's beauty similar to that in 210-2 are found in Chr. 848, 1057, 1581. The passage which most clearly illustrates the meaning of these lines, however, is that from Bl. Hom. 95. 19, cited by Cosijn in connection with Chr. 1073: 'Mid godum dædum ond halgum we sceolan beon gefrætwode, gif wē þonne willaþ bēon on þā swīþran healfe Drihtnes.'

The phrase nǣ—wynnum is merely a general periphrasis for 'every man,' and is not intended to be interpreted literally. It is equivalent to 'those who have passed through this earthly life.' For weorulde wynnum cf. Gu. 76; Wife's Complaint 46; see also Schücking's Bedeutungslehre, p. 103.

212. This euphemism is also found in Gen. 1627; Prayers 4. 30.

213a. Both metre and sense demand the compar. fæg[e]re instead of fægre. The scribe made a similar mistake in 389, and still other instances are found in Ph. 330, El. 242, and Gu. 353. It may be that the scribe's copy had fægere (see Sievers, Gram. 231. 4), and that he, not noticing the metrical demands of the hemistich, mistook the form for the positive, and syncopated it. I read fæg[e]re, since it preserves as nearly as possible the MS. form, but the penultimate syllable must be given a secondary accent in reading. The Corrector's attempts at restoration in 213-4 show that he was not collating a copy purer than our text, if indeed he had any other copy at all.

Fæg[e]re land takes up the topic suggested by ōðer līf, to which it is so closely connected that it seems almost an appositive; yet we must construe it as the subject of is, 214. Sievers' notion (PBB. 10. 449) that fæg[e]re here has a short radical vowel is certainly wrong, based as it is upon the Corrector's false reading of the line.

213-224. This charming little picture of the heavenly home, together with that in 359-365, reminds one slightly of the Augustinian hymn beginning, 'Ad perennis vitæ fontem' (Mone, Lateinische Hymnen des Mittelalters 1. 422). I quote 16-8:

> Virent prata, vernant sata, rivi mellis influunt, > Pigmentorum spirat odor, liquor et aromatum, > Pendent poma floridorum non lapsura nemorum.

Cf. Bede's vision of Dryhthelm (Hist. Eccl. 5. 12): 'Ecce ibi campus erat latissimus ac lætissimus, tantaque flagrantia vernantium flosculorum plenus, etc.' Both the Apocalypse of Peter (5) and that of Paul speak of the trees, flowers, and fruits of heaven. See also the much more extended passage in Ph. 589-631.

214. wlitig and wynsum. Cf. Ph. 203, 318; Wonders of Creation 63; Rid. 84. 19; Eadg. B 3; Heliand 1393.

215. Kock (Jub. Jaunts, p. 70) would emend to brād[r]e lond, in order to obtain what by his interpretation would form a third parallel, to be grouped with hyhtlicra hām and Cristè gecwēmra. But the adjective in the latter of these two phrases is much more effective if construed, not as a comparative modifying hām, but as a genitive plural used substantively. The important idea to bring out is not that the home itself is more pleasing to Christ, but that those who have attained unto it are so. Hence the poet continues: 'Let us turn thither where He sits, . . . and [where] companies of angels and the blessed stand about the throne.' Cwĕman is used to signify the well-pleasing service of persons, rather than the pleasure afforded by an impersonal object. When, as happens in a few instances, gecwĕme is applied to things, it expresses the idea of use or service, not gratification.

The phrase hyhtlicra hām might be syntactically parallel with Criste gecwĕmra, and signify 'the home of the happy.' However, since we have the same phrase in the gen. sing. in 138, with the adj. in the comparative, and since hyhtlic hām seems to be a well-known expression for heaven (cf. Dom. 24; An. 104), it is preferable to construe hyhtlicra here as a true adjective in the comparative, rather than as a substantive in the gen. plur. As to brāde lond, Barnouw points out (p. 108) two parallels to this use of the weak adj. minus the article, in the brāde rīce of Beow. 2207 and Ex. 556.

For Criste gecwĕmra, cf. 596; Gu. 277; Jul. 259; El. 1049 (used of persons in every case).

217b. The Corrector's emendation, uton ācerran, is altogether unnecessary. He did not understand uta (for utan—see Brown, Lang. of Rushw. I, 2. 43), and, as it stood at the end of the line, he thought the a belonged to the cerran of the next line. So he drew a dash after a and before cerran, to indicate that the two were to be joined, and then added on above ut. He corrects uta again in 252.

218a. Sit is the only case of this sort of contraction in Sat.
Sievers, PBB. 10. 474, remarks that siteð would also be metrically correct.

218b. sigora Waldend. So Gen. 126; Ex. 16; El. 731.

219a. Drihten Hǣlend. So 576, 683.

219b. dēoran hām. So 257; Gu. 40, 843.

221b. Cf. ēadigra gedryht, El. 1289; Chr. 1664. Carpenter (Deklination der . . . Lindisfarner Hs., p. 16) records one instance of a gen. plur. in -re. Cf. also hēþenre in 268.

223b-224a. Cf. wlite scīne, 211.

224b. If any one is disposed to question the metre of this hemi-stich, it will be found a normal C-verse if Wuldor- is read as a mono-syllable.

225-280. There is an evident confusion in the MS. as to the speaker or speakers who utter 230-279. Within the passage there is no indication, aside from the change in number which the personal pronouns and verbs present, that more than one person (or group of persons) speaks. From 230 to 246 the first person plural only is used. Then in 247-255 the first person singular appears. Lines 256-267 shift back to the plural, while in the section from 268 to 279 the first singular is employed except in 270-2 and 277-9. Yet there is not the slightest stage-direction which would hint at a change in the speaker. This might be explained in three ways. First, the original poet himself might have become confused in the management of his dialogue. Secondly, the hypothesis suggested by Abbetmeyer that 1-365 represent an arrangement of 'plaints,' made with a view to dramatic recitation in connection with the Church, might be applied here: the necessary stage-directions were simply left out by the man who composed this reading version. The third explanation, on the basis of which I have emended the text, seems to me the most generally satisfactory. Some scribe, either he of our MS. or the writer of an earlier copy, seeing in the lines between 230 and 246 so many verbs and pronouns in the first person plural, concluded that the verbs in 225-9, which introduce the speech, and which were then in the singular, ought to be changed to the plural, because he thought that the speech itself belonged to the whole troop of devils. By the time he finished the whole section with 279, he was completely possessed by this notion of a group-plaint, and altered 280 accordingly. But when one keeps the whole speech in mind, it is evident that this speech would be perfectly consistent and in character if it had been given by Satan alone. If we compare each of the earlier laments in turn, we see that this practise of speaking for considerable periods, now in the first person singular, now in the plural, is a general one with Satan. The present lament, if we disregard the form of the introduction and conclusion as they stand in the MS., presents nothing that would lead one to suspect any difference between it and the others which Satan utters.

With this interpretation in view, it is possible to divide 225-7, as they have come down to us, into two lines which are satisfactory in both metre and import. In the MS. they stand thus: þā gēt ic furðor gefregen fēonda ondetan wæs him eall ful strang wom and wītu. We have only to read fēond, and take wæs—Wuldorcyning as a line with an expanded first hemistich, which may be scanned:

$$\times \times \times \times \;-\!| \;-\; \times \;|\; -\; \times.$$ Ondetan is used absolutely.

226a. Cf. 322: wæs þæt eall full strong.

226b-228. Cf. 68-9. For ānforlēten, see Anglia 27. 270.

230a. So 441a.

232. The objections to the metre of 232a are not serious (Graz, Eng. Stud. 21. 17; Sievers, PBB. 12. 467). It can be scanned as an expanded E-verse; cf. Gnom. Cott. 3. Dōmlēase may be another instance of the archaic weak adjective unaccompanied by the article, or an adverb, or an adjective in the nom. plur. Thorpe, Kennedy, and Bosworth-Toller translate: 'wage a hapless (powerless) war.'

This interpretation attempts to take drēogan gewinn in the sense which it has in Beow. 798 and Gu. 86. It is possible to abandon the usual meaning of drēogan gewinn (Gras would even cancel gewinn), and either follow Bouterwek's 'erdulden, machtlos, Mühsal,' or render the line: 'Dishonored we must suffer tribulation, through the might of the Lord.' But, on the whole, the most satisfactory rendering is: 'We must wage (or endure) an inglorious struggle, because of the might of the Lord.'

232b. Cf. þurh Drihtnes miht, 605.

233a. The Corrector's in wuldres wlite improves the sense. Cf.
Ph. 609; Pr. 16.

235a. Cf. 663: sang æt selde. Sceoldon in 236ᵇ is auxiliary (Grein: 'hätten . . . dürfen').

236a. þūsendmǣlum, which is found elsewhere only once each in Ex., Jud., An., occurs four times in Sat.: 236, 509, 569, 632. Cf. especially An. 872: þegnas ymb þēoden þūsendmǣlum.

236b. In want of a better word, we may accept the Corrector's wǣron to fill out the line.

237a. Cf. 508, 556, 593.

238a. Byrhtword is a striking formation. One would hardly expect word to become the second member of such an adjective compound. Grein's very doubtful rōfword (Rhymed Poem 16) is the only possible parallel. The phrase beorhtan reorde, however, is found in Chr. 510; Ph. 128; cf. An. 96. Rankin (JEGP. 8. 421, n. 92) suggests that byrhtword may mean 'famous.'

239a. Cf. 659; An. 146; Fates of Ap. 28.

239b. Cf. An. 871: ātan ymbe Æðelne.

240a. Cf. Gen. A 237 and Gen. B 741-2.

241a. So 261, 410, 443, 530, 558, 627, 675, 690.

243a. Cf. 581: dōgra gehwǣm.

243b. Cf. Jul. 725, and se Dēora, 543.

244b. God seolfa. So 260, 350, 430, 441.

245-246. It is evident that the poet has here allowed the mood which held sway over him when he was writing the exhortations to control him again for a moment. He forgets for the time being that it is Satan who is supposed to be describing heaven, and lets slip three lines which are not dramatically consistent with the rest of the speech, in that they imply that men were already mounting up to heaven to receive the reward of their faith, before the fall of the angels had taken place.

Cf. Ps. 53. 6: 'Dominus susceptor est animæ meæ,' which is rendered in Spelman's Psalms: 'Drihten andfeng is sáwle minre.' Cf. also Ps. 61. 3, and the vivid picture in 1 Thess. 4. 16.

Since, according to NED., eall in OE. never has a distributive sense, the relation between eallum and the verbs becōm and gelēfde is anacoluthic.

247. When we remember that Satan utters the whole lament, Grein's mē 'for clearness' (Wülker) is not needed.

248a. So Rood 40.

250b. So Ex. 6; cf. Heliand 1458, 2701, 4529; lāre longsume, Gu. 766; Chr. 44.

251. For mīre, see Sievers, Gram. 188, n. 5, and cf. 439.

253b-254a. Cf. 86b-7a.

254b-255. It might be possible to conceive these lines as the conclusion of Lucifer's speech to his followers, in which case they would have to mean that God's supreme position rested on mere empty boasting. Thus Kennedy (following Thorpe and Bouterwek) translates: 'For this is empty boasting which we have borne so long.' With this interpretation the transitions in lines 254-8 are smooth and straightforward. Grein's paraphrase of drugon īdel gylp, 'eitel prahlen . . . begiengen,' does not accurately render the sense, unless he really intended the quotation-marks, which in the Dichtungen are printed after this sentence, to come at the end of the preceding one. If such an error in punctuation has occurred, Grein's rendering would agree with the interpretation here proposed. I have nowhere found Lucifer presented as accusing God point-blank of boasting, but rather as himself vaunting that he would equal God. Of course, this very attitude of Lucifer implied that he thought God overrated himself. Still, he is usually too much occupied in exalting himself to make such a flat accusation against God. Hence, although the first interpretation is quite possible, it is better to take these lines as a parenthesis, in which Satan admits the futility of such speeches as he has just reported. I interpret the phrase īdel gylp as drugon as exactly parallel to the onmēdlan þe hīe ǣr drugon of 74b, and translate literally: 'This is mere empty boasting that we formerly perpetrated that while.' This is only an aside, and in 256 Lucifer resumes the narrative. Some confirmation of this view lies in the fact that to describe the gylp is a phrase which is very frequently used to describe the gelamp for of Lucifer's fall. Thus Christ in Bl. Hom., p. 31. says in reply to the tempter: 'Gemyne þē sylfne hū mycel yfel þū þe gelamp for gitsunga and oforhȳdo, and for þīnum īdlan gilpe.' Cf. also 633-4.

257. Cf. 173, 187.

258a. Cf. 657, Cyning in cestre.

258b. Cf. Beow. 2923; Chr. 185; Gu. 307, 791; Met. 9. 5; Gnom. Ex. 199.

259. Thorpe: 'that our exile-steps must seek the grim abyss.' The possibility of such a misconstruction as this led Grein and Wülker to insert wê. But since the omission of the pronominal subject of verbs is a characteristic feature of the style of Sat., and since there is no real uncertainty involved, the original text can be left unaltered. Cf. Heliand 3603: uunnun uuracôthôs.

260a. grimme grundas. Cf. Chr. 1527; Gen. B 407.

260A. Grein's and Wülker's pointing of 260-1 as two expanded lines is impossible. Though 260A lacks alliteration in the MS., there is nothing to lead us to suspect a gap. Cosijn's emendation of âna Cyning to on riht Cyning (cf. Rid. 41. 3) and Graz's hê is riht Cyning are both possible. But one is loth to surrender the idea of the uniqueness of God which âna conveys. On the basis of 584 and 688 I suggest, hê is âna [riht] Cyning: 'He alone is true King.'

262a. Bouterwek's suggestion, swlð, has much in its favor. ic for ð is no great error for a scribe to make. We have another possible instance in Sat. itself (see 322). The phrase Meotod mihtum swlð was a common formula. Cf. Chr. 716; An. 1209, 1513; Gifts of Men 4. Yet there is no real necessity for changing the text either here or in 322. Swilc in the sense of 'so great' is not common, to be sure; but it appears to have this meaning in Gu. 1101, and it is not a great step from talis to tantus. We do not have to assume absolute identity in all the cases of an OE. alliterative formula.

262ab-264a. Cf. the lines quoted by Ungemach (p. 26) from the Chester Plays:

> Sum in þe air, sum in the lift, > þar þai drei ful hard[e] schrift.

The ultimate source of the conception is the Pauline phrase, 'princeps potestatis aeris huius' (Eph. 2. 2). Gregory in Moral. 2. 47 (Patr. Lat. 75. 66) expands this: 'Et scimus quod immundi spiritus qui e cœlo æthereo lapsi sunt, in hoc cœli terræque medio vagantur.' See also Isidore of Seville, De Ord. Creaturarum 6. 7; 8. 1 (Patr. Lat. 83. 927, 931). As Abbetmeyer points out (p. 32), the same conception underlies Gu. 176-196. Cf. also Sat. 112-3.

264b-265. Cf. P. L. 4. 20-3:

> The Hell within him, for within him Hell
> He brings, and round about him, nor from Hell
> One step, no more than from himself can fly
> By change of place.

The parallelism of 264-5 with the passage in Bede to which Todd refers Milton's lines is still closer: 'Ubicunque, vel in aere volitant, vel in terris aut sub terris vagantur, suarum secum ferunt tormenta flammarum.'

266-269. Cf. 145-9.

268. The MS. reads hæþenre sceal. Grein was surely on the right track in his suggestion (withdrawn in the Sprachschatz) that sceal here means 'throng,' and is connected with scolu, scalu. The scribe's copy read sceale. This he thought a mistake for sceal, which in his mind should govern the infinitive which immediately follows. Kluge (Zs. f. Vgl. Spr. 26. 101, n.) gives a list of words which exhibit this o:a variation in their radical vowels, among them rodor:rador (Elene) and scolu : scalu. Scalu is found in the compound handscale, Beow. 1317. For gen. plur. hæþenre, see the note on eadigre, 221.

The meaning of hæþenre sceale is especially fitting here. Since the blessed have just been described in the plural, the collective sceale is at least slightly more acceptable than the generalized individual, sceale (Bouterwek's reading; Thorpe's hæþene scealcas involves a more elaborate alteration). Moreover, scolu is often used with some substantive adjective in the gen. plur. in contexts similar to the present one. Cf. womfulra (scyldigra) scolu, Chr. 1535, 1608; Gu. 175; árleasra sceolu, El. 835; and also seo werge sceolu, El. 762; þære deorcan scole, Chr. 1523.

Compare with this passage the part played by the devils in the Judgment scene, 630-4.

274. The line has been corrupted in the MS., possibly because of the double meaning of geþolian. With the genitive, þolian means 'suffer;' 'lack,' 'be deprived of' (cf. Gen. B 633); with the accusative, 'endure.' The genitives bitres and ðæs clearly are out of place, and may be due to an overflow of the influence of geþolian into a line which is really parenthetical. Moreover, beala as dat. sing. of the *wo-*declension would be a very unusual form. Grein's hemistich is unsatisfactory both in metre and sense, yet his collocation of bit... and bryne is suggestive. Cf. As. 57: se bittra bryne; and An... biterne bryne. The line, in ðæm bitran bryne beala gnornian, scans perfectly, and is grammatically correct. Beala as acc. plur. arouses no suspicions (see Sievers, Gram. 237, n. 5). The only diff... with the new reading is that there are no cases recorded of gno... with an object, although, of course, begnornian is used transi... However, the more common murnan, which is usually intra... 20; possib... takes an object in at least one case (Fates of Mere interpreta... in Sal. 483). This may countenance a similar gnornian.

276. Hām stōðelian here and in 345 is a periphrasis for wunian.

277-279. Cf. 116. Heofona rīce is found in 618.

281-282. Cf. for the wrath of God, 429, 452; Gen. A 54; Gen. B 299. Hælend God: so 493. Gen. B 621 has womcwidas.

282a. Cf. 194. Mæg is here adhortative. Cf. Dom. 3; Deor 31.

283b. Sē ðe his = 'whose.' Cf. An. 460: gif his ellen dēag.

287a. Cf. gearo tōgēgnes, 693; Dom. 91: gearwað tōgēanes.

287b. Schücking points out (Bedeutungslehre, p. 10) that grēne here has more the meaning of 'schön,' 'mühelos gangbar,' than that of the sensuous 'green.' Cf. the phrase in Chr. 1673: wegas þē sindon wēþe. This curious use of grēne meets us again in line 339 of the Poema Morale (Morris's OE. Homilies, pp. 173 ff.): 'Go we þene narewe wei and þene wei grene.'

288a. So 625.

288b. Barnouw (p. 106) notes that se ælmihtiga God is found only here. Grās for metrical reasons would cancel God. If God is retained, we must consider the line a schwellvers with only the second half expanded. Since this is a possible scansion, I let the word stand, but it surely has the appearance of either a conflation or a subconscious addition by the scribe.

289. Cf. 310, 359.

290. Cf. 246, 303, and Wald. B 29: gif ðū earnunga ǣr geðenceð.

291. Cf. Wald. B 27: sē ðe him tō ðām Hālgan helpe gelīfeð; and see the similar construction in Beow. 1272. Cf. also An. 1566: ūs þone Hālgan helpe biddan. For the scribe's correction, gelǣfeð, which very likely was in the original, see Sievers, Gram. 360. 1, n. 2.

292a. Cf. An. 459.

293. Compare the phrasing of Chr. 661: uppe mid englum ēce staþelas.

293b = 354b.

295b-296. Cf. the same picture in 307-9, 652-3.

297a. Grein's wīdeferð (spelled thus in Ex. 51) restores the alliteration, and is sufficiently like æfre forð in meaning for us to assume that the latter is a scribal blunder. Cf. Chr. 163a: wunast wīdeferh.

298a. For this collocation cf. Pn. 49: of ceastrum and of cyne-stōlum.

298-300. Dietrich wrote concerning the MS. reading of line 300: 'Lūcan braucht durch onlūcan (erschliessen) wohl nur erläutert, nicht ersetzt zu werden.' It is true that post-classical recludo means 'close,' as well as 'open,' but there is no evidence that a similar paradoxical development occurred in OE. (i. e., that lūcan ever came to mean 'open'). Kock's conjecture that the on, which was appended by the scribe to lifigend (as is proved by the fact that a point marking the end of the line stands after on), really belongs to lācan enables us both to rectify the meaning and to obviate Gras's objection to the metre of the MS. reading of 299ᵇ on the ground that it was an expanded D-verse in the second hemistich. Dietrich's interpretation of locen as signifying 'the Lord's holy place,' i. e., 'the Scripture,' is far-fetched.

Kock renders 299: 'Let us extol those having lived on earth.' But this does not fit the context well. It is preferable, with Grein and Kennedy, to consider that dēman has the same object as cȳþan, namely, þæt, which we may take as referring to the attainment of the bliss of heaven by the righteous. This interpretation fits in well with the hortatory tone of the context. The poet has just said: 'The Lord points out to us an abiding home, bright city-walls; there the blessed souls freed from all sorrow shine resplendent, where they shall for ever inhabit a royal seat and city.' He then breaks out: 'Let us make this known! While we live on earth, let us extol it! Let us unlock the mystery, let us be spiritually discerning! For if we do this while on earth, and are allowed to go thither, thousands of angels will come to meet us.' Thus the object of dēman is not the gesǣlige sāwle, who form merely one feature of the picture of heaven, but the whole scheme of the soul's salvation and reward, which the poet has summed up in the phrase locen Waldendes. Dēman is used in exactly the same way in the common phrase, dēman Dryhtnes ǣ. Cf. especially Fates of Ap. 10. In the sense of 'extol,' it takes an impersonal object in all the cases listed in the Sprachschatz except in the debatable lines, Gen. 17 and 1718. At any rate, the parallelism is drawn much closer in the above rendering than in Kock's.

Kock notes that lifigend is here a plural substantive, meaning 'dwellers.' We may construe it as nom., and interpret error lifigend as a general parallel to such phrases as that in 210ᵇ⁻¹ᵃ, the on corðan ǣr of 303, and the ǣror on his līfdagum of Met. 26. 87. onlūcan . . . locen. See the comparison of Christ to a key in Chr. 19 ff. (based upon the Antiphon, O Clavis Davīd).

301b-302a. Compare the angels' meeting with Christ as he ascends in Chr. 545-6.

303. Cf. 290.

305a. Cf. the figure of quenching sin in Alm. 5-9.

306-309. The correct pointing of these lines is established by 43: 'Tunc j fact that 307-9ᵃ are a close paraphrase of Mt. 13. quotation at fulgebunt sicut sol in regno Patris eorum.' Such a Grosschopp's di renders doubtful, if it does not finally disprove, was not fa (p. 262) that Sat. was written by some one who with the Bible at first hand. Ælfric (Hom. 1. 218) translates the verse literally.

308a. Cf. Soul's Address 139: þin gāst . . . fægere gefrætewod.

309a. Grimm (Deutsche Myth. 2. 583) takes sceldbyrig to be a reminiscence of the old pagan Valhalla, which was covered with golden shields. He refers to the Edda, which speaks of Valhöll as 'skiöldum þökt, lagt gyltum skiöldum, sva sem spanþak.' Rankin (JEGP. 9. 53, n. 7) disagrees: 'It is more likely that the author had in mind the idea of heaven as a sheltering city.'

309b. Holthausen's transference of hēo, which in the MS. follows þær, to 310ᵃ normalizes the metre of the latter hemistich. Cf. 359.

312-315. Graz's explanation of the MS. reading (see variants) is very satisfactory. He suspects that 314 immediately follows 312, and that the intervening phrase, āwa tō aldre, which is repeated in different form in the two hemistichs of 315, ā tō worulde, ā būton ende, was copied down too soon. The two phrases, āwa tō aldre and ā tō worulde, are about the length of one MS. line apart, so that anticipation would be quite easy, especially as the sense of wunian mōton joins very smoothly to āwa tō aldre. When the scribe discovered that he had copied this last phrase already, he filled up the vacant space with the similar ā tō worulde to eke out the line.

314a. drēama drēam. Cf. especially Chr. 1637; also Chr. 580; Ph. 658; Gu. 652ᵇ-3ᵃ.

315a. āwa tō aldre. So Beow. 955; Gu. 758; Chr. 479, 1646; Ex. 424; Jud. 120.

315b. ā būtan ende. Cf. 379, 679; El. 801, 893; Prayers 3. 59. Rieger (Zs. f. D. Phil. 7. 18) notes that this is an impossible second hemistich, in that it has two alliterating syllables, and emends by Jud. 120 to būtan ende forð. But one should not be too scrupulous in the case of such a tag as 315.

316. Ēalā hwæt: 'O how wicked it was for the accursed one to determine that he would not obey heaven's King.' For ēalā hwæt, cf. Bl. Hom. 33. 28.

317. Cf. 183; El. 367.

318a. Cf. Fæder frōfre Gāst, Jul. 724; Chr. 728; El. 1105; and frōfra Fæder, Gloria 8. These expressions recall St. Paul's 'Pater misericordiarum et Deus totius consolationis,' 2 Cor. 1. 3.

318-322. Kock's note on this passage (Jub. Jaunts, p. 71) is very illuminating. Holthausen had previously divided the reading of the older editors, wēacwānedon, into wēa cwānedon. Wēa is, of course, a northern equivalent for wēan. (Hence we do not need actually to emend, with Kock.) Kock interprets mān and morður as parallel in meaning to wõe, i. e., as 'pain and distress.' He points out that both words (that is, when used independently of each other) mean, according to the context, either 'crime' (the normal signification) or 'punishment,' 'torment.' One is at first loth to give up here the radical meaning of the words, because of the frequency with which the alliterative phrase mãn and morðor occurs as a designation of iniquity. See Met. 9. 7; Wulfstan, Hom. 188. 14; Verc. hom. 21 (folio 116ᵃ). But a passage in Verc. hom. 2 (Förster, p. 93) removes all scruples: 'Þǣr þonne mid dîoflum drohtigan, in morþre and on mâne, in sûsle and on sâre, on wêan and on wyrmum.' Cf. also Wulfstan, Hom. 187. 18.

Kock regards hrêopan—morðor as a parenthesis, and wæs—onǣled as a second predicate of flôr. Accepting Grein's ðâre, he translates: 'The floor . . . was to the many there ignited thus: this all was very hard.' Kock admits, however, that Grein's interpretation of wæs—onǣled as impersonal may be right. (Gu. 639-640 presents a somewhat similar construction, though the verb is not impersonal.) There is not much to choose between the two views. The phrasing of . lines 39ᵇ-40ᵃ, flôr is on welme, ǣtre onǣled, adds some slight confirmation to that of Kock. At any rate the two clauses, hrêopan—morðor and wæs—onǣled, evidently stand in the relation of an effect to its cause.

Thorpe's suggestion that the first ðâr of the MS. is an error for æto offers a third possibility. His reading gives a very smooth text, and is paralleled in thought by 420-1.

319b. The hrêowan of the MS. is impossible both in grammar and syntax. Hrêowan is always used impersonally with the dat. The letters þ and w are so nearly alike in OE. script as to be in some cases indistinguishable. This explains the scribe's mistake.

320. Cf. 386: wide geond windsele wordum mǣndon; also 136. The scribe's winsele here and in 386 might be retained. The poet may have intended by this word to describe hell as the meeting-hall of the infernal comitatus, the devil and his thanes.

322a. On swylce, see the note on 262ᵃ.

322b. Cf. 226.

323b-324a. 'Who first came thither at the head of his troop.'

324b-325a. Cf. Chr. 1539: lêge gebundne.

327a. Cf. 108.

327b. Ûp þanon. So 635ᵃ.

328. Cf. 171-2.

329-330a. Cf. Chr. 390: habbaþ folgoþa cyst mid Cyninge; are described.

331-332. On the basis of El. 1289, where souls left out as being in þâm âde, it may be suggested that the scribe to a gryndes, because of its somewhat similar appearance to a would be especially easy if gryndes happened to end a line in his copy. Ad or welm suits the context as well as, if not better than, Grein's beaht. Grynde is not found elsewhere, but afgrynde, 'abyss,' is cited in the Supplement to Bosworth-Toller. Ah is here practically equivalent to and, as in Beow. 1448. Thorpe's ne before mōten is necessary to the meaning. Cf. nabbaδ . . . nymþe in 335.

Kock's nymþe grundas an / wunian mōten: 'and only could reside in the abyss' (see Jub. Jaunts, p. 73), presents a very unusual adverbial construction with wunian, i. e., acc. + prep. or adv.

333. On wōm see Schücking, Bedeutungslehre, p. 94.

Cf. An. 1554: þār was wōp wera wīde gehȳred.

334. The reading of the MS. is metrically suspicious. Holthausen corrects it by emending to gristbitung and gnornung. It is probable that these nouns should be singular, as two such plurals would sound forced. Cosijn's emendation, gristbitunge and gnornunge, is very acceptable, because it is evident that the scribe might easily have thought the final c's (indicating palatalization as in þinge, Wulfstan, Hom. 305. 7) should be e's. Cosijn is altogether wrong, however, in giving the impression that this orthographical phenomenon would point to Kentish influence, or that it is meant to signify hardening of final ng. It occurs in other dialects as a sign of palatalization.

Compare this line with the Biblical 'fletus et stridor dentium' (e. g., Mt. 8. 12). Cf. also 339. Grein translates mecga by 'Teufel,' but, for evidence that the poet intends us to take the word literally, see the note on 46-7.

335-337. Groschopp (p. 257), on the evidence of wē, 335, considers these lines to have been abstracted from one of the laments and introduced here in the wrong place. It is more likely that wē is a mere slip of the scribe for nom. plur. hē, which we have met before. Otherwise, unless we accept Groschopp's view, we should have to interpret 335-7 as a brief lament of the mecgas, thrown in without an introductory phrase.

If it is the scribe who is guilty of wē, his doze must have lasted through 335ᵇ, which in the MS. lacks alliteration. Cosijn's hāt and cyle restores the line with the least possible change. Cf. hāt and ceald, 132.

337ᵇ. Cf. 111ᵇ.

338ᵇ-339a. This might mean: 'he who in hell was within twelve miles'; but it is better to consider at equivalent to tō, and to translate: 'he who was within twelve miles of hell.'

339ᵇ-340a. Cf. Assmann's Ags. Homilien und Heiligenleben 168. 128: 'þār biδ ēagana wōp and tōδa gehēaw.'

341. For an explanation of this preterite form (for hwurfon) see Sievers, Gram. 72, n., and Bülbring, Elementarbuch 268, 280, n. Weor for wur is very rare.

342. Cf. Gen. B 375: hér is fýr micel ufan and neoðone; and Gen. B 353: hát wæs him ðтом. The line reminds one of Milton's "Twixt upper, nether, and surrounding Fires" (P. L. i. 346).

343b–344a. Cf. 121ᵇ-2ᵃ. Gu. 116 and An. 1618 have wuldre bescyrede. 344ᵃ = 68ᵃ.

344b. héofon. See Sievers, Gram. 384, n. 2.

345. See the note on 276. One might be tempted to connect hám staðelodon in this case with Isa. 14. 13, 'super astra Dei exaltabo solium meum,' which is the ultimate source of 372-3; but the phrase does not correspond closely to the verse in Isaiah, and it is better to interpret it as in 276. We may paraphrase: 'They lamented the deep plot, contrived while they were yet in heaven, by which they meant to rob the Saviour of his celestial kingdom.'

Cf. Jul. 431 (þurh déop gehygd) for déop gehygd employed in a different sense.

346b. Cf. nergende Críst, 570.

347a. Cf. 688; Gu. 654, 764.

347b. Cf. 260Aᵇ, 688ᵇ.

349–351. 'Nam quis promat summæ pacis quanta sit lætitia' (Augustinian Hymn, 'Ad perennis vitæ fontem,' l. 7). Compare this impassioned mode of utterance also with Chr. 219-223 and Dom. 30.

The alliteration swá : swá is striking indeed, and has provoked several commentators to emend, but the intense emotion of the poet may account for the rhythm of the line. In modern English 'so' is often enunciated with extreme emphasis.

352. The alliteration of the line as it stands in the MS., sunnu: scíneð, is incorrect. Holthausen's scíma for sunnu rectifies this, and may very well since it contains several consecutive vertical strokes, as Groschopp have been misread sunnu (which is an error for sumno, as Grein pointed out). This is a natural mistake, because swegles léoma would normally be associated with the physical sun (see Ph. 103). hú scír sunnu þær is also perfectly possible, notwithstanding a D2-verse objection that it is metrically too long. It is simply proposed with anacrusis. Hú scír Sunu þær, which Cosijn's own own evi-dence, presents a much more doubtful scansion. Cosijn's own were acce-tion to his reading, viz., that, if Sunu (=Christ) context, is Meotodes mihte would be out of harmony with the by the pow serious one. That Christ should shine in heaven in 351-God' is intelligible enough.

The scribe has, I think, failed to follow the poet of 355ᵇ. becomes evident when we examine his treatment of arouses suspicion at once. For with the acc. never means 'before' in a local sense, when no motion is expressed. Holthausen's for seolfan Gode is unacceptable, because it contains an unnatural construction in the weak dative of seolf unaccompanied by the article, a construction which is never used, so far as I can discover. Holthausen was on the right track when he previously suggested the omission of for. There is an erasure within this hemistich as it appears in the MS., which, if rightly interpreted, shows us what happened. The scribe copied correctly se before seolfa; but because of his misunderstanding of the passage as a whole, and because he had to fit the hemistich into the context as he conceived it, he added for after seolfa and erased se.

Now what was the original misconception which led the scribe to write such a line as 355ᵇ? He thought that swegles lēoman meant the physical sun, whereas it really refers to God as the light of the Holy City. Although the earlier visions (e. g., Apoc. Petr. 5) sometimes include the sun among the features of heaven, it was a theological commonplace that heaven had no need of material sources of light.
This view is based upon Rev. 21. 23, 24 (which derives in turn from Isa. 60. 19-20): 'Et civitas non eget sole, neque luna, ut luceant in ea: nam claritas Dei illuminabit eam: et lucerna eius est Agnus. Et ambulabunt gentes in lumine eius;' also Rev. 22. 5: 'Dominus Deus illuminabit illos.' Cf. the Augustinian hymn, l. 20: 'Agnus est felicis urbis lumen inocciduum.' There is plenty of evidence that the Anglo-Saxons were acquainted with the idea. Rev. 22. 5 inspired this sentence from the Vercelli homilies (Förster, p. 113): 'Ne þearf man næfre nē sunnan nē mōnan nē nǣniges eorðlices liohtes, forðan þær is se ælmihtiga Dryhten scīnendra and līohtra þonne ealle ōðre lioht.' Cf. the homily in MS. Hatton 116 (Förster, p. 136): 'On þēre ceastre sunne ne līhteð nē mōna; ac Godes beorhtnesse hī onlīhteð.
And sēo beorhtnes wes þæt sōþe Lamb, þæt wes se ælmihtiga Drihten.'
Of the poetical passages, Ph. 587-8 is most similar to that in Sat.:

> þǣr sēo sōþfæste Sunne lihteð > wlitig ofer weoredum in wuldres byrig.

Cf. also Chr. 106, where Christ is called sōðfǣsta sunnan lēoma; Chr.
1651-2; and Chr. 696-7:

> Hē is se sōðfǣsta sunnan lēoma, > englum ond eorðwarum æþele scīma.

Thus we see that there was every possibility that a poet who frequently shows acquaintance with orthodox views, even on minute points, might introduce such a feature into his picture of heaven.
Yet it is just such a feature as a scribe of more limited knowledge might have failed to encounter. In the original the sentence is climactic. The poet even suspends the definite statement that the heavenly light he has been describing is God himself, over a parenthesis of a line and a half (354-5ᵇ).

Se seolfa God is paralleled by se sylfa Cyning, Chr. 1209, and by se seolfa Sunu Waldendes, Sat. 396.

There are two other possible ways of treating the passage. One would be to consider sunnu a mistake for Sunu (= Christ), and to emend 352ᵃ to hū þēr scīr Sunu. In this case, seolfa God or se seolfa God would be a sort of remote echo of the Deum de Deo of the Creed. The second would be to abandon the notion that anything more than the material sun is meant in these lines, and hence to accept Grein's hū scīr sunnu [better sunna, for transcriptional reasons] þēr, to omit se in 355ᵇ, to construe seolfa as nom. plur. (see 145) referring to englas and sanctas, and to add the dat. ending to God.
Lines 354-5 could then be literally translated: 'There angels have eternal bliss and saints sing: that is, themselves before God (i. e., in the very presence of God).'

353. þæt mǣre cynn. Cf. Ps. 104. 11.

356-357a. 'The blessed then shall be they who come from the earth, who bring, etc.' E. Meyer (p. 103) rightly construes bringaδ tō bearme as an asyndetic relative clause parallel to þe of eorδan cumaδ.

For bringan tō bearme see the note on 153.

356-363. Cf. Ex. 543-7. Compare 356 with 613-4.

357-358. Bouterwek translates correctly: '(Sie) bringen zum Schosse (Gottes?) Blüten des Wohlgeruchs, wonnige Würze; das sind Worte Gottes.' Ziegler (p. 165) explains the somewhat obscure imagery of this passage thus: 'Die verwandlung der hingeschiedenen seelen in blumen war nebst der in vögel zum fluge gen himmel der naiven anschauung des altertums verwachsen. Ein vergleich der worte Gottes mit dem geruche der blüten, der wonnesamen würze, lag daher sehr nahe; die seelenblumen duften in befolgung Gottes willens, geniessen seinen segen und geben ihn wieder. . . Wie dem Phönix aus dem neste blütengeruch anhaftet, so spenden die seligen vor G…
den duft ihres irdischen frommen lebens als himmlischen lohn.' …
ler's assumption that the poet implies that the souls 'be of eo… cumaδ' are themselves 'seelenblumen' is very doubtful. But his …
gestion that lines 357-8 are connected with the Phœnix is enlight…
I give below the pertinent sections :

> þǣr þā eadgan bēoδ
> æfter wræchwile weorcum befongen, > āgnum dǣdum ; þæt þā æþelan sind > wyrta wynsume mid þām se wilda fugel (526-53…
> his sylfes nest biseteδ ūtan.

Swâ nû æfter dēaðe þurh Dryhtnes miht somod sîþiaþ sâwla mid lîce, fǣgre gefrætwed, fugle gelîcast, in êadwela[n] æþelum stencum.　(583-6)

　　　þǣr hî Dryhtne tô giefe worda and weorca wynsumne stenc in þâ mǣr[an] gesceaft Meotude bringað, in þæt lêohte lîf.　(658-661)

Cf. also Ph. 465 ff.

It is not the idea of the fragrance which good lives present to God that proves the connection with the Phœnix, for we have this conception in 2 Cor. 2. 14: '[Deus] odorem notitiæ suæ manifestat per nos in omni loco;' cf. also Eph. 5. 2; Phil. 4. 18; and Rev. 5. 8: 'Phialas aureas plenas odoramentorum, quæ sunt orationes sanctorum.' It appears also in the sweetness of Guthlac's breath when his death was near (Gu. 1246 ff.). The proof would seem to lie in the fact that the fragrance mentioned in Sat. is described as that of flowers and plants, which, of course, recalls the herbs and spices of the pyre which the Phœnix builds for itself.

The designation of that which the 'pleasant herbs' signify as word Godes is illustrated by the passage from the Greek Physiologus which Cook cites in connection with Ph. 659: 'The Phœnix resembles our Saviour, who came from heaven with his two wings full of fragrance, that is, of virtuous celestial words, in order that we with holy prayers may extend our hands, and send up spiritual fragrance by means of our good lives.'. The idea in Sat. seems to be that we bring with us to heaven the teachings of God which we have carried out and embodied in our lives—that we thus reflect them, as it were.

Compare also with lines 357-8 Ph. 542-3: 'Sâwla sôðfæste . . . stîgað tô wuldre wlitige gewyrtad mid hyra weldǣdum;' and Bl. Hom. 75. 14: 'Gif wē ôþre men teala lǣraþ, and hîe be ûrum lârum rihtlice for Gode libbaþ, þonne bringe wē Drihtne swêtne stenc on ûrum dǣdum and lârum.'

For stences, see Sievers, Gram. 237, n. 3.

358a. So Ph. 194, 529.

359. See 289, 310.

360. Cf. 615.

361. For the ending of lædað, see Sievers, Gram. 358, n. 2. Compare 361-2 with 589-590.

362a. Cf. 619. Dom. 29 has ð tô ealdre.

364. Cf. 183.

365a. See for other instances of this phrase in a similar context Chr. 1080; Ph. 516; An. 885; Beow. 186; Pater Noster 3. 17.

365. Dietrich remarks concerning 365 that the poet must be charged with an alliteration poor beyond compare, in hām : hæt, 'unless perchance it should be that wyrcan has been omitted before mōt.' It will be noticed that in every one of the other cases of wel is hām, the phrase occurs in a line of which w is the alliterating letter. Dietrich's wyrcan suits the context far better than Holthausen's fōn, even though we may grant the latter's contention that the alliteration Dietrich objected to is not unparalleled. There is no good reason for accepting Graz's notion that this line is a prosaic addition of the good scribe, who, inspired by the preceding picture of the bliss of heaven, writes, 'wohl dem der das kann!' Dietrich's emendation is perfectly satisfactory, and stands on as firm a footing as any other which is made metri gratia.

366a. encgelcyn. This line must mean that Lucifer by himself constituted an order of angels, unless we are to consider encgelcyn an error for encgelcyning, which is improbable; no one has suggested encgelcyning, but Kennedy translates by 'angel prince.' Such a conception as that first mentioned is not really so strange as it sounds. Jewish writers had developed the system of the orders of angels before Gregory the Great gave it its definitive Christian form. They set the number at ten. Cf. the Book of the Secrets of Enoch 29. 3: 'And from the fire I created the orders of the incorporeal ten troops of angels.' Gregory interprets the nine stones of Ezek. 28. 13 as the nine orders of angels (Moral. 32. 23: Patr. Lat. 76. 664-5, et al.). Satan was created preëminent and preferred before all these orders (ibid.; cf. also Hom. in Evang. 34: Patr. Lat. 76. 1250). In the thirty-fourth of the homilies on the Gospels, Gregory applies the parable of the ten drachmas to his angelology: 'Decem vero drachmas habuit mulier, quia novem sunt ordines angelorum. Sed ut compleretur electorum numerus, homo decimus est creatus.' Thus we see that Gregory did not explicitly teach that there were ten orders of angels. The sequence of events was this: Lucifer was put over the nine orders. He rebelled and drew half of the heavenly host after him. Man was created to repair the loss, and the elect (who will equal in number the faithful angels) will form the tenth order. As Ungemach (p. 24) remarks, doubts about the arithmetical relations of Gregory's system would be removed by the assumption of a tenth choir of angels, led by Lucifer. Yet the true interpretation seems to be that Lucifer, as Abbetmeyer puts it (p. 23), 'grew into a tenth choir when he had gathered about himself the host of his loyal adherents from the ranks of the other choirs.' Hence, it is unnatural that Lucifer should be called 'that angel-order' by a sort of synecdoche.

See Bouterwek's discussion of angels in Cædmon, pp. CXLI-CXLVIII. The ten orders are mentioned in Gen. B 246-250; Sal. 454; Ælfric, Hom. I. 342. (See also Rask's Grammar, p. 194.)

The translation of encgelcyn by some such phrase as 'offspring' or 'progeny of angels' would be insipid. It is possible that Ettmüller's interpretation of cyn here as signifying 'one of a genus' may be correct, but it would be an instance of a rare idiom.

Cf. the reference to the order that fell in 20: þæt eðele cyn, engla ordfruman, þæt þe oft forwarð.

366a. Kühn's argument (p. 12) that the use of ǽr genemned proves 366-664 to be an independent poem, on the ground that there is no encgelcyn mentioned in 1-365, is fallacious. In the first place, þæt eðele cyn, engla ordfruman, 20-1, is surely a definite enough mention of an order of angels; and, secondly, ǽr genemned may not only mean 'afore-mentioned,' but may be merely a parallel of hâten, and mean literally 'was named of old.' (A similar pleonasm occurs in the use of hâten and nemned in Met. 10. 46-7.) By this interpretation, ǽr and on gēardagum would form still another parallel.

367a. According to Roskoff (I. 267), Eusebius (Demonstr. Ev. 4. 9: Migne, Patr. Gr. 22. 271) was the first to name the chief apostate 'Lucifer'; Eusebius quotes in full the locus classicus, Isa. 14. 12 ff. Cf. also Verc. hom. 19 (folio 106ᵇ).

368b. So 614, 651, 693; Gen. 88.

369a. Cosijn interprets in wuldre as 'in cælo.' It might mean equally well 'in his glory,' 'in his beauty.' Cf. ðurh wuldor, 59.

369b. Cf. Gen. 911, 932: wröhte onstealdest.

370. Bright commends Toller's translation: 'that he would give way to pride.' Grein renders: 'dass er Hochmutgedanken haben wollte.' One is almost tempted to interpret the line metonymically, i. e., by letting oferhȳda stand for the pomp and state which Satan in his lofty thoughts hoped to possess. Cf. Thorpe's translation of oferhȳda: 'preëminences.'

371a. The hemistich in the MS. is a syllable short. Groschopp (p. 261) points out that 'Satan' is not used in 1-365. Compare 371 with 447 and 316.

372-373. Cf. Gen. A 32-4 and Gen. B 272-6. The source of these passages is Isa. 14. 13-4.

374a. Cf. the OE. Gospel of Nicodemus (PMLA. 13. 507. 25): ordfruma ealra yfela; and El. 771: ealre synne fruma.

376b. The MS. is clearly at fault here, but it can give us more assistance toward a correct reading than it has been allowed to do.

It may be recalled that this MS. shows a tendency to omit initial h's. (Or, more properly speaking, the scribes' copy must have shown such a tendency, because instances of the phenomenon are found in the work of all three scribes.) A case in point is insíðgryre, 456. In 456, however, no accent marks the syllable in, whereas in 376 there is one to indicate some special emphasis on the syllable. But the scribe, even though he copied the accent, thought the repetition of the syllable in in the reading of his copy (i. e., in ínðo) was a mere dittography. Ettmüller suggested in tð hênðo, but without reference to the MS. Moreover, the sort of anacrusis which his emendation involves arouses suspicion in a second hemistich, whereas a single unemphatic syllable like in is often found as anacrusis elsewhere. [H]inðo (see 399) is a word continually used to denote the degradation of the devils, and it fits in naturally here between helle and Nergendes nlð, to the latter of which it stands in parallel relation.

Holthausen adduces the collocation of hete and nlð in Gen. B 768 and Dan. 619-620 in support of his emendation.

377b. and nð seoððan þæt. Cf. 634.

378. Another corrupt line. There is no authority for a verb and-or onwlítan, and the existence of an analogical onséon is not above suspicion. Andwlitan had better be taken as the substantive, and the omission of some infinitive assumed. Holthausen's séon suits the context. We may compare the thought of 170. Bright's andwlitan mósten, besides retaining the doubtful verb, is metrically abnormal, since expanded E-verses do not seem to have been used in the second hemistich.

379b. Here begins the narration of the Harrowing of Hell, of which the ultimate source is the apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus. It is not necessary to assume with Groschopp (p. 255) and Balg (Der Dichter Cædmon und seine Werke, p. 37) that there is a gap at this point. The transition seems a little abrupt, but 366-379, which are a résumé of the career of Satan, prepare in a general way for the introduction of the new theme. The treatment of this theme does not pretend to narrative completeness, emphasis being laid rather upon the personal relations involved. Since several circumstances are left unexplained, the story appears to us fragmentary, if we try to discover every event related with the Gospel of Nicodemus reproduced in the same order in Sat. But we must remember that the story of the Harrowing was common property in the Middle Ages, and that many things which seem to us disconnected rest on presuppositions which any one then would have understood perfectly. The poet has omitted all the speeches given in Nicodemus, in which the patriarchs repeat in hell the prophecies of the Descent which they had spoken while earth, as well as the dialogue between Satan and Inferus. He greatly reduces the dramatis personæ, so that Eve, the Saviour, and the group of fiends, stand out clearly.

No full list of references on the growth of the story of the Harrowing of Hell need be given here. For our purpose the best general studies will be found in J. Monnier's La Descente aux Enfers: Étude de Pensée Religieuse d'Art et de Littérature; J. Turmel's La Descente du Christ aux Enfers; Wülker's Das Evangelium Nicodemi in der Abendländischen Literatur; and W. H. Hulme's Middle English Harrowing of Hell and Gospel of Nicodemus (pp. lx ff.).   The other OE. poems to be compared are: Gu. 1076-7; Chr. 140 ff., 558 ff., 730 ff., 1160 ff.; El. 181 ff., 902 ff.; Credo 30-2; and the whole of the poem called the Harrowing of Hell. References to Biblical and patristic sources will be found in the Introduction, p. xxxiii, n. 44.

379b-380a. Cf. Nicodemus, Version B, 2. 1 (all references in these notes, unless otherwise specified, are to Version B of the Descensus Christi ad Inferos, edited by Tischendorf in Evangelia Apocrypha):
'Et audita est vox Filii Patris altissimi tanquam vox tonitrui magni.'
Cf. 393^b-4^a. Compare 379^b with 406^b.

380b-381a. Cf. Ps. 106. 16: 'Quia contrivit portas æreas; et vectes ferreos confregit;' in Nicod. 8, at the voice of Christ, 'Portæ mortis et seræ comminutæ, et vectes ferrei confracti sunt et ceciderunt in terram.' Cf. Aldhelm, De Laudibus Virginum 454-7 (ed. Ehwald,
p. 372):

> Sed tamen optatam senserunt sæcla salutem,
> Dum Deus ad herebi vagas descenderit umbras, > Ferrea vectiferæ fracturus limina valvæ;
> Ærea portarum quassavit claustra tetrarum.

Cf. also 468.

381b-38a. Into these short but vivid lines is compressed the long section of Nicodemus in which the patriarchs and John the Baptist tell of their joy at the fulfilment of their prophecies.

384. Either of the lines proposed by Ettmüller and Grein (see variants) may be employed to fill up the gap, but we cannot be absolutely sure that what has been lost did not refer to Satan alone, who had just been 'named' in 366-7. Still it is probable that nemdon here simply means 'mentioned.'

385b. Cf. egsan afyrhte, Chr. 1020.

385 ff. All accounts of the Descent emphasize the terror of the fiends at Christ's approach. This goes back to the anxious dialogue in Nicodemus (chapter 4) between Satan and Inferus, the keeper of hell.

386a. Cf. 136, 320.

388a. In the normal versions of the story, Christ comes to Hades unaccompanied, or at most with only the converted thief. Yet one of the earliest circumstantial accounts, that by Epiphanius in the Homilia II in Sabbato Magno (Patr. Gr. 43. 459), mentions a troop of angels who accompany Christ, and assist him in the occupation of hell. (See also the note on 403.)

Cf. þeoden engla, 666.

389-391. Cf. the diction of Chr. 931: 'fore Dryhtne færeð wælm-fyra mæst.' The ultimate source of the lines in Sat. is Nicod. 2: 'Subito illuxit nobis lux magna;' Version A has: 'Subito factus est, aureus solis calor (var. color) purpureaque regalia lux illustrans super nos.' The phrasing of the lines in Sat., with the definite reference by the devils to their former condition, is peculiar to this account of the Descent, and seems to be a direct reminiscence of 1-365.

For fægere, see the note on 213ᵃ.

390b. So 718ᵇ.

392. Grein refers to Jul. 211 for another instance of wītu, conceived as the torments which the demons inflict upon the souls under their power. Brooke's translation, 'So will now our pains be deeper,' misses the point entirely (Hist. Early Eng. Lit., p. 329), as does Cosijn, when he interprets fīre wītu as 'unsre hölle.' Adam says to Satan in Nicod. 20. 1: 'Dominus ecce venit, qui omnia figmenta tua nunc destruet.' Satan is also represented as especially downcast at losing, as one OE. version puts it (Mod. Phil. 1. 606), 'eall þæt wē hider habbeð gestrȳnd, [and] fīf þūsend and fīf hund wintre on pine and on synbænde gebrōht hæfden.' Cf. Bl. Hom. 85. 15: 'Nis nō þæt ān þæt hē him ūre wītu [ne?] ondrǣde, ac hē wile eac ōþre of ūrum bendum ālēsan.'

393ab = 585ᵇ.

393b-394a. Cf. 379ᵇ-380ᵃ, 406.

394b. The damned are called drēorge in Chr. 1 545.

395a. So Beow. 602. The phrase reminds one of 40-1.

395b. Cf. sūsel þrōwian, 41.

397a = 520ᵇ.

397b. Graz confirms Grein's emendation, wile ... to stand. The hemistich, though uncommon, may be allowed.

398b-399. Cf. Beow. 283: 'ā syþðan earioð-bræce, in wræc wunn and An. 1379-80: 'þǣr ðū syððan ā, sūsle gebunden, Beow. 2920. Syððan ā occurs in An. 1193, and ā syððan in Beow. reading. Yrrewe

399a. The line has no alliteration in the MS. reading. ... forces (cf. El. is, moreover, not elsewhere found. Graz' here ... the line. It is and heaðoweorc, Beow. 2892) neatly restores possible that the omission of an h in the scribe's copy is responsible for his mistake. It would be quite natural for him to change greweorces to yrreweorces. (In Bl. Hom. 89. 12, et al., yrre is spelled erre.) Christ's descent to hell came to be quite generally considered as a sort of military expedition, as well as a mission of deliverance, so that the meaning of herreworc suits the context. For hindo, cf. Gen. B 776; Chr. 591.

400a = 190ᵃ.

400b = 582ᵇ. Christ now enters hell. All that precedes has been merely preparatory to the actual entry.

402a. Cf. 421ᵃ.

402b-403a. Cf. 566ᵇ: hine forð lǽdde; 553ᵇ-4ᵃ: hām gelǽdde ūp tō ēðle; 461ᵃ: ūp tō ēðle.

403b. Cf. 564: þā cōm wolcna swēg.
This mention of the angels' song of rejoicing is somewhat similar to that in the Greek Anaphora Pilati (Version B 8; I quote from the translation in the Ante-Nicene Fathers 8. 463): 'And on the first of the week, about the third hour of the night, . . . majestic men of indescribable splendor of dress and of glory appeared in the air, and an innumerable multitude of angels crying out and saying: Glory in the highest; . . . come up out of Hades, ye who have been kept in slavery in the underground regions of Hades.'

404a. Cf. Harrowing 9: on dægrēd; and 17: 'þǽr cwōm on ūhtan ān engla þrēat.'

404b. Cf. 600: Drihten seolfa.

405a. Cf. Gu. 775: fēond oferfeohtað; also Sat. 462-3.

405b-406. We may paraphrase: 'The struggle began at dawn, when that terror came upon them.' For the chronology involved in this statement, see the note on 512ᵇ.

407a = 443ᵃ.

407b = 653ᵇ. The speech of Eve evidently interrupts the progress of the company to heaven. This reminds one of the order of events in the A-version of the Descensus (24. 2-3).

408a. Cf. Abrahames cynn, 461.

408b. The Corrector has set things to rights here by changing what was almost certainly ǣfre to ēfe, and by adding o to hē in 409ᵇ (the o might possibly be by the scribe). The scribe evidently thought, at least at first, that Adam made the following speech, in spite of the fact that Adam is mentioned by name in 411.

The thought of 408ᵇ-9 is related to the passage in Bl. Hom. 89. 5, where we are told that, after Christ had already freed some of the imprisoned souls, 'Ēua þā gȳt on bendum and owōþe þurhwunode.' The B-version of the Descensus in Nicodemus describes in separate sentences the joy and thanksgiving with which Christ is greeted singly by Adam and Eve. In the Blickling Paschal homily this is expanded, so that a separate confession, supplication, deliverance, and thanksgiving are assigned to each member of the original pair. These OE. passages rest on some such Latin source as the dialogue found in the Book of Cerne (The Prayer Book of Aedeluald, ed. Kuypers, pp. 196-7). First, we are told: 'Adam autem et Eua adhuc non sunt desoluti de vinculis;' and after Adam's prayer and release : 'Adhuc Eua persistit in fletu.'

And in 408ᵇ is adversative.

410. With the accounts of the fall of man which follow in 410-421 and 471-488 should be compared Jul. 494-505; Chr. 1380-1419; Gu. 791-850, 953-969; Ph. 393-423; and the unique narrative in Gen. B (491 ff.).

411a. This curious dual construction is found, though without twā, in Gen. B 387 (unc Ādāme); Wids. 103. Old Norse also employs it (see Grimm, Deutsche Grammatik 4. 294). The sense is: 'We two, Adam and I.'

411b. Bouterwek (p. CCXXXIV) classes eaples among the words in which e replaces a, that is, he construes it as acc. plur. It may also be gen. sing. after þigdon. See Shipley, Gen. Case in A.-S. Poetry, p. 58.

412. It came to be universally accepted that the serpent of Gen. 3 was Satan (or his tool or emissary) in disguise; hence, the nǣddre is called se atola in 413. Þurh nǣddrcn niÞ does not mean 'through the serpent's guile' (Kennedy), but 'because of the serpent's enmity.' Cf. Ph. 400: 'þǣr him niÞ gescōd, ealdfēondes æfest;' and Ph. 413: þurh nǣdran niÞ.

412b. Cf. Gen. 901ᵇ; Minds of Men 63: swā hit ryht ne wæs.

413a. Cf. 487.

414a. Cf. 49.

415a. hāligne hām. Cf. 567; Gu. 120; Chr. 1675; An. 1683.

417-418a. Cf. Gen. B 891: 'blǣde nāme on trēowes telgum.' Cf. 484ᵃ: beorhtan blǣda.

418b-421. The orthodox view (represented in Nicodemus) was that the souls of the righteous who died before the new dispensation would be held, until the Redeemer should come, in claustris inferni, not in order that they might be punished, but because of primal guilt. (See Gregory, Moral. 4. 29: Patr. Lat. 75. 666.) Their place of confinement came to be identified with the 'bosom of Abraham' (Lk. 16. 23), which Augustine describes as 'locis quidem a tormentis impiorum remotissimis, sed apud inferos' (Civ. Dei 20. 15). However, though this was the accepted view, opinion regarding the condition of the patriarchs was not unified or always consistent. Thus the Pseudo-Augustinian Sermo CLX (Patr. Lat. 39. 2060-1), after having stated that they lived 'in tranquilitatis sinu,' says that after the Descent their torments were transferred to their tormentors. Even the Jewish apocryphal writings show this confusion. In the Apocalypse of Moses (37. 5), 'God issues the following command in regard to Adam's soul: 'Lift him up into paradise unto the third Heaven, leave him there until that fearful day of my reckoning;' whereas in the Vita Adæ et Evæ (48. 2), God says to Michael: 'Let him be in thy charge till the day of Judgment in punishment, till the last years.'

The Anglo-Saxons also held both opinions. Curiously, even a version of Nicodemus (see Mod. Phil. 1. 606, quoted above in the note on 392) expresses the more rigorous view. Verc. hom. 19 (folio. 107ᵃ) is very close to our poem. After recounting Adam's fall, the homilist says: 'Ac hit him wearð biterlice forgolden on hyra life. Ādām . . . syððan tō helle fōr, and þær grimme witu þolode fíf þūsend wintra and eahta and twēontig wintra.' (Cf. also Heliand 3604-5: 'Sie guldun is im mid fiuru lōn an theru hētun helliu.') Cynewulf, on the other hand, writes (Chr. 146-7): 'Nu hie sōfte þæs bidon in bendum hwonne Bearn Godes cwōme to cearigum;' which seems to imply not actual torment, but merely imprisonment. Ælfric (Hom. 1. 94; 2. 80) follows Gregory.

418b. Cf. 578: him þæt swearte forgeald.

419. Cf. 72ᵇ-3; Chr. 31-2.

421b. Holthausen's onælde is unnecessary, the participle being in the predicative position. Onæled is also uninflected in 341, where it is to be construed as modifying the plural andsacan, not the singular helle.

422-425. Such prayers for deliverance, while not found in Nicodemus, form an important part of the story of the Descent in many versions, e. g., that by Epiphanius (Patr. Gr. 43. 454) and the seventh Blickling homily.

424a = 568ᵇ; Gen. 13ᵇ; Wonders of Creation 92ᵇ. Cf. also 95ᵃ, 167ᵃ.

425a. Gān understood. Note the unusual alliteration of 425.

426. Since ymb in a temporal sense elsewhere means either 'about' or 'after,' Grein-Köhler (Sprachschatz) suggest that and is here written for end, 'before.' It is more probable that and is a simple connective, used with the following phrase in just the same manner as in Men. 11, 19, 83, 215. Since ymb originally was indefinite, not signifying whether the time indicated is before or after, it is only natural that it should be used for the former, as well as the latter.

The formula cannot be taken literally, referring as it does to the period of Christ's entombment. This can with some truth be reckoned as three days, but three nights is impossible. However, as the Anglo-Saxons measured time by nights, the phrase means no more than the usually alloted 'three days.' Cf. El. 483-6.

There are three possible candidates to be considered in deciding who is meant by the begen Hēlendes (who is also the person addressed in 430). The problem has puzzled some investigators so much that they assume a gap after 379, in which it would all be explained (cf. Groschopp, p. 255). Hippolytus (De Christo et Antichristo 45) had introduced John the Baptist as a precursor of Christ in hell, as well as in this world. In Nicodemus this conception is considerably expanded. It appears also in the OE. Harrowing of Hell. Dietrich and Wülker (in the Bibliothek), therefore, accept John as the begen. But, as Holthausen points out (Anglia Bb. 5. 233), according to Mt. 14. 6-13, Mk. 6. 21-9, John had been dead a long time, and could hardly be said to have come to hell 'three days ago.' Now in the B-version of the Descensus in Nicodemus (chap. 23), the converted thief immediately precedes Christ, and announces his imminent approach. (In the A-version, the thief meets the patriarchs in the paradise to which they are led after the Harrowing.) Hence the converted thief is accepted by Hammerich (Älteste Christl. Epik der Angelsachsen, p. 67), Groschopp, Ebert (Allgem. Gesch. d. Lit. d. Mittelalters 3. 256), and Wülker (Gesch. der Eng. Litt. 1. 62). But, aside from the fact that the thief did not go to hell as soon as he died, but to paradise, the bonds, torments, and wrath mentioned in 427-9 would altogether misrepresent the relation to Christ in which he stood. (The same objection would hold good in the case of John the Baptist.)

Grein, in his translation, and Holthausen (loc. cit.) solved the problem by proposing Judas, who would be called, as were the disciples generally, Christ's begen. (Judas is mentioned again in 574-9.) The Heliand (5429-36) contains a passage which shows that Judas' arrival in hell was conceived as premonitory of Christ's coming thither:

Thuo uuarth thes thie uurētho giuuaro uuamskathōno mēst, Satanās selbo, thuo thiu sēola quam Iūdases an grund grimmaro helliun.
Thuo uuissa hie te uuāron, that that uuas Uualdand Crist, Barn Drohtines, that thār gibundan stuod; uuissa thuo te uuāron, that hie uuelda thesa werold alla mid his henginnia hellia githuinges, liudi, alosian an lioht Godes.

On a very small point one must disagree with Holthausen. He says that Judas' suicide took place on the night of Thursday-Friday, and that for that reason it could be said that he ymb þrīo niht cōm. But the passage in Matthew (27. 3-10) which Holthausen cites, immediately follows a verse (v. 1) according to which the leaders of the Jews, when morning was come, took counsel against Jesus to put him to death; so it is probable that Judas destroyed himself on Friday morning, and the explanation of 426ᵃ offered above is still pertinent.

428a. Cf. 162, 343, 449.

428b-429. Cf. 281-2, 452-3; also for ðām anmēdlan, 74.

430a. Cf. 63. Eve here turns to Judas, and addresses him directly.

431. Cf. 436.

432b. So Beow. 749.

433b. Schücking (Bedeutungslehre, p. 48) considers hylle gryre a compound in which gryre is merely an intensive.

435b. Holthausen's emendation restores the alliteration, and really suits the context quite as well as the MS. reading. Cf. 430-1. Frēodrihten is a loftier term than the more intimate heora Drihten. What delights and amazes the hellwaran is that 'God himself, the noble Lord,' is going to visit hell to save them. Cf. also Frēodrihten, 547. Of course, metrically, þæt heora Frēodrihten is also satisfactory.

437. Cf. 169.

438a. Cf. Jud. 84-5.

438b-440. The adjuration of Christ in the name of her daughter Mary, which Eve utters, is founded upon the doctrine expressed in Chr. 96-9:

> in Dāuīdes dȳrre mǣgan
> . . . is Ēuan scyld eal forpynded, > wǣrgð[o] āworpen, ond gewuldrad is > se hēanra hād.

See also Ælfric, Hom. 2. 22. Förster (Archiv. 116. 306) has indicated that this prayer is found also in the Blickling Paschal homily and the OE. Martyrology. I quote the similar passages. 'Ic þē hālsige nū, Drihten, for þīnre þēowene, Sancta Marian; . . . þū wāst þæt þū of mīnre dehter, Drihten, onwōce. . . . Āra mē nū, mīn Drihten, for hire wuldres weorþmyndum' (Bl. Hom. 89. 17). 'Þǣr Ēua hine hālsode for Sancta Marian mǣgsibbe þæt hē hire miltsade. Hēo cwǣð tō him: "Gemyne, mīn Drihten, þæt sēo wæs bān of mīnum bānum and flǣsc of mīnum flǣsce: help mīn forðon"' (Martyrology, EETS. Or. Ser. 116, p. 50). Mary is also invoked in Harrowing 84 ff.

Compare the phrasing of 439ᵇ-440 with 475-6.

Note the Anglian dat. dohtor, for WS., Kent. dehter.

440b. So Rood 102ᵇ.

441a. So 230ᵃ.

442. Cf. Gu. 610: ācne Onwealdan ealra gesceafta.

443a. So 407ᵃ. The poet again postpones telling of the ascension of the host to heaven, as he had done at 408, this time to recount the actual 'harrowing.'

444. On the ending of clomma, see Sievers, Gram. 237, n. 3, and cf. clomme (Sprachschatz). It is not necessary to assume a gap here (see variants). Wuldre is in the instrumental case, and is used similarly to mid wuldre, Ps. 79. 3. Thorpe renders the line: 'He in glory had bonds of torment on the fiends fastened.' We may translate wuldre better by 'gloriously.' Holthausen rightly rejects Hofer's metrically impossible clom mū (Dat. u. Instrum. in den Cædm. beige-legten Dicht., p. 22).

Cf. wītes clom, 103, 452.

Abbetmeyer (p. 12) regards 444-456 as 'a variant of the monologues contained in 75-189.'

444-446. Cf. Nicod. 24: 'Et ecce dominus Iesus Christus veniens in claritate excelsi luminis mansuetus, ... catenam suis deportans manibus Satan cum collo ligavit, et iterum a tergo ei religans manus resupinum eum elisit in tartarum, pedemque suum sanctum ei posuit in gutture.' 'In claritate excelsi luminis' recalls wuldre, while furðor seems to represent 'in tartarum'; Tartarus was the lower portion of hell.

With 445ᵇ-6 compare 633-4 and El. 941:

> þ[ec] se mihtiga Cyning > in nēolnesse nyðer bescūfeð, > synwyrcende, in sūsla grund, > dōmes lēasne.

For in þæt neowle genip, cf. 102, 180.

447. þingian in OE. never seems to have the meaning 'to rule,' by which Bouterwek and Kennedy translate it. Nor is it used elsewhere in an absolute sense. Compare this line with 371.

449b-450. Cf. 28, 42. 'Translate: 'Never may they have the light of heaven, but only the abyss of hell (literally, in hell).' Compare 450ᵇ with 456ᵃ, 485ᵇ. The construction of these lines tempts one to improve 450ᵇ by omitting in. Whether the phrase in helle could be construed adjectively (= 'hellish') like the on helle of Beow. 101 (see Klaeber's Glossary under on) seems somewhat doubtful.

451. Cf. the thought of 115-7.

452-453. As Dietrich says, the sense of the MS. reading is complete. To bring the lines into some sort of metrical regularity with as little alteration as possible, I have ventured to print them as an expanded line, omitting the word God, which the scribe may have added unconsciously, and which in any case adds nothing to the meaning. The content of seoððan . . . clom is elevated enough for it to be treated as a schwellvers.

Cf. 281-2, 428-9.

453-456. The Blickling homilist (p. 87) makes Adam express a longing to be delivered 'ût of þyssum bendum, and of þyses carcernes hûse, and of dêaþes scuan.'

Why Trautmann considers this passage faulty in meaning one cannot see ('Zum Altenglischen Versbau,' Eng. Stud. 44. 336). The metre of 455 is somewhat unusual, since the short foot scuwa does not follow a foot with a secondary accent ($-\!-$), but other cases of this scansion are to be found.

Cf. Chr. 118 (see also 257): deorc dêaþes sceadu drêogan sceoldan; Beow. 160: deorc dêaþscua.

454a. The atole of the MS. might be an adverb, a weak adjective (acc. sing. neut., modifying clom, which some grammarians consider to be either masc. or neut. on occasion), or a neuter adjective used substantively in either the inst. sing. or acc. plur. Grein emended it to atolne, and it is also legitimate to emend to the substantive atol (see 395^b). This substantive atol has seemed to be the best of the alternative constructions, because either some substantive or the colorless adverbial eall, referring to a preceding substantive, rather than a true adjective, is used with the phrase tō ǣhte in all the other cases; yet a hair will turn the scale.

454b. egsan gryre. So 728^b. Schücking (Bedeutungslehre, p. 35) thinks this compound has here and in 728 developed a specifically Christian sense equivalent to 'qual,' 'verdamnis.' He compares egsan þrêa, Chr. 947, 1064, 1365. Yet egsan gryre surely did not become so concrete that the idea of 'terror' was much suppressed, not even in Dan. 467, where it is used as virtually a metaphor representing the fiery furnace.

455a. Cf. 105^a.

456. According to Schücking (op. cit., p. 49), gryre here is nothing more than an intensive, as in 433.

457. Cf. Nicod. 24. 2 (Version A): 'Et extendens Dominus manum suam fecit signum crucis super Adam et super omnes sanctos suos, et tenens dexteram Adæ ascendit ab inferis; et omnes sancti secuti sunt eum.' The saints are then led to the earthly paradise. Turmel (La Descente du Christ aux Enfers, pp. 53-7) states that Gregory is responsible for the idea of their going directly to heaven (i. e., on Ascension Day), instead of to the earthly paradise.

458a. So 506ᵃ. Concerning the orthodoxy of representing Christ as ascending to heaven at this time, see the note on 512ᵇ.

459b. Cf. 624ᵇ; An. 40, 287; Dan. 609; the phrase is used of heaven in Ph. 633.

460. Him adds nothing; but, on the other hand, it is not seriously 'disturbing' (see Graz).

Gregory makes a point of remarking that Christ, in his ascension from the Mount of Olives (and the same would apply to his ascension from hell), mounted up without the aid of the angels (Hom. in Evang. 29). Bede (quoted by Cook, The Christ of Cynewulf, p. 122) follows Gregory. Yet the conception of Christ's being aided by the accompanying host is also found. Cf. Chr. 517-9:

> Wē mid þyslice þrēate willað > ofer heofona gehlidu Hlāford fergan > tō þǣre beorhtan byrg mid þās blīðan gedry[h]t.

In the present case, however, in which the prophets, not the angels, are the spirits specifically mentioned, since practically all accounts of the Harrowing state that Christ takes Adam by the hand, and leads the company forth, it is not impossible that the MS. reading is not exact, and that the lines should be as follows:

> hōf hī[e] mid him handum hālige > witigan ūp tō ēðle, Abrahames cynn.

Compare 460 with the hōfon hine hondum of Gu. 702.

461b. Cf. Ādames cyn, 408.

462a-463a. Cf. 404ᵇ-5ᵃ; Hymn 25: Ðā . . . flond gefl̄æmdest; Gu. 107: fēond wæs gefl̄ymed.

463b-464. It is altogether possible that there is a gap after wolde, in which some such line as that suggested by Ziegler once stood (see variants). The meaning would then be parallel to 401ᵇ-2. By this interpretation, the prophecies mentioned would be those of which so much is made in the Gospel of Nicodemus. Yet the line is intelligible as emended by either Bouterwek, Grein, or Graz. Grein's reading is very close to that of the MS., and may be scanned ×× | -́ -́ | -́ ×, swā bearing the alliteration.

466b. Cf. 380ᵃ.

467b-468a. Cf. 380ᵇ-1ᵃ, and especially Harrowing 34ᵇ-5ᵃ: helle weallas forbrecan and forbȳgan.

468b-469. Ettmüller seems to have been the only editor who has seen the drift of these lines; he says: 'de dæmonum et damnatorum ossibus poeta loquitur.' The translators all seem to be afraid of the word 'bones.' The poet is simply employing Scriptural phraseology. Cf. Ps. 101. 4: 'ossa mea sicut cremium aruerunt'; Prov. 17. 22: 'spiritus tristis exsiccat ossa'; Ezek. 37. 11: 'aruerunt ossa nostra'; Nicod. 1. 7.

4712. Cf. An. 733; Rid. 36. 13.

471b ff. Grüters (Über einige Beziehungen zwischen Altsächsischer und Altenglischer Dichtung, pp. 35 ff.) has already demonstrated a relation between this address of Christ to the patriarchs and his address to the sinner on Judgment Day in Chr. 1380 ff. In certain portions this relation is quite close. Cook indicated as the source of the passage in Chr. the homily included among the Sermones Supposititii of Augustine (CCXLVI), but assigned to Cæsarius of Arles (Patr. Lat. 39. 2207). The eighth Vercelli homily (folio 60ᵃ) also has a version of this address. There is no evidence of direct connection between Sat. 471 ff. and the Latin. Another somewhat similar speech of Christ to Adam is to be found at the end of the Paschal homily in which Epiphanius recounts the Descent (Patr. Gr. 43. 462).

Compare with this story of the fall of man the short accounts in the Heliand, 1032-9 and 3593-3606.

472. On Christ as creator, see the note to 9-10. Groschopp's objection (p. 253) to the shift in the person of the verbs and pronouns in Christ's speech (cf. 474, 482) is trivial. In 472 he is addressing the whole company of patriarchs; hence he naturally speaks of Adam and Eve in the third person. But since these two were present, and in the forefront of the assembly, the poet may certainly be allowed, without giving special notice, to represent Christ as turning to them (in 482) when his words have to do with their personal history in particular.

Cf. Chr. 1380: Hwæt! ic þec, mon, hondum mīnum ǽrest geworhte.

473. Cf. 20.

4742. On begēton, see Sievers, Gram. 109.

474-478. For the menio, cf. Nicod. 20: 'Tunc pater noster Adam intuens omnem illam multitudinem diligentius mirabatur si omnes ex eo procreati essent in seculum.'

In order that we may not make the poet guilty of dating the birth of Adam's forty children before the fall, as has been the custom of previous editors and translators, Thorpe excepted, it would seem justifiable to consider 474-480 as a parenthesis, in which Christ describes how the creation of man was extended. This parenthesis is a sort of introduction to the story of the fall. In 477-480 the poet states the common doctrine that men might have lived many, many years in paradise if they had not sinned. Eorlas, therefore, is simply a general term for men (i. e., the men whom the first parents would have brought forth in innocency). The idea, applied exclusively to Adam and Eve, is found in Gen. 803-816. Gen. B 786-8 also expresses it briefly: 'ac hie wel meahton libban on þām lande, gif hie woldan lāre Godes forweard fremman.' A paraphrase of 477-8 will bring out the poet's conception: 'It would have been possible for men to dwell in that homeland many, many years, until (or but) it afterwards befell, etc.'

474b. On Godes willan recalls the command of Gen. 1. 28: 'multiplicamini, et replete terram.'

475a. In view of the fact that the number of Adam's children is a variable quantity in the works which mention the subject, it is hard to decide whether it is best to assume some undiscovered source for fēowertig; or to agree with Groschopp that the number arose through confusion (or, as seems just possible, through a conscious effort for parallelism) with the forty days intervening between the Resurrection and Ascension, and the forty days of Jesus' fast, which are both mentioned later; or, as a third possibility, to acquiesce in a suggestion which one of my colleagues offered, that 'forty' here is merely a good round number. Groschopp had also mentioned the possibility that fēowertig is used, similarly to other multiples of four, to denote an indefinitely large number. (See Wülker's Altenglisches Lesebuch, I, notes on selection 3, l. 232; 12. 172; and II, note on 5. 2.) Cf. also Klaeber's note on Beow. 147.

In the Vita Adæ et Evæ (24. 2) we are told that Adam 'begat thirty sons and thirty daughters; in all sixty-three children.' The Apocalypse of Moses (5. 1) does not count the first three sons separately, but mentions thirty sons and thirty daughters. The Book of Jubilees does not state the total, but, by adding up those referred to, we get fourteen. According to Charles (note on Jubilees 4. 10), Syncellus assigns Adam thirty-three sons and twenty-seven daughters.

476. [on] middangeard. It is better to assume that the scribe, because he had just finished writing the syllable on twice in þonon, omitted the preposition unconsciously, than to accept the Corrector's middangearde. Cf. the similar phrasing of 439-440. The cancelation point under the e of MS. onweocon is clearly by the scribe.

479-480. The MS. reads: þæt hē āfyrhte eft / fēond in firenum / fāh is æghwǣr. Dietrich has a long note on these lines, the upshot of which is that they should be printed as one, because there are several other lines in the poem which make sense, but appear metrically irregular. But 479-480, as Dietrich reads them, cannot be made to approximate the scansion of any known OE. line. The emendation he offered to make the passage intelligible is very ingenious. He believed that eft in the MS. reading of 479 was erroneously written for èst, as an echo of eft in 478. Ãfyrhte is a mistake for ãfyrde (Ettmüller and Bouterwek had already suggested this last). Dietrich translates: 'bis alsdann es geschah dass er (Adam) die liebe entfernte: . . . ein hasser ist furchtbar feindlich überall.' The last clause is absurd, and, besides, such an indefinitely expressed reference to Adam is altogether out of harmony with the phrasing of the preceding lines, in which Adam has not been logically distinguished from Eve and their children. The obvious way of interpreting Dietrich's reading would be to construe hè merely as an anticipation of fèond, as the subject of ãfyrde. The passage could then be translated: 'that the sinful fiend put away their favor' (i. e., removed God's favor from them).

Klaeber (JEGP. 12. 257-8) omits eft, reads ãfyrde [foldbüendum] fèond in firenum, and translates: 'that he, the enemy, removed it (= èðel) from men.' He compares Ph. 5-6. It seems to me that the sense of Klaeber's reading would be improved if Dietrich's èst were retained as an explicit object of ãfyrde, in place of the unexpressed hine (= èðel). Cf. Grein's translation; also Kennedy's: 'until . . . the fiend . . . brought God's mercy to an end.'

The simplest method of treating the lines, and the one least disturbing to the text of the MS., is to omit eft (as a scribal dittograph), and print the words þæt—ãghwèr as one expanded line. Graz objected to assuming isolated expanded lines in Sat. However, as they are by no means a rare phenomenon in the other OE. poems, I have admitted a very few into Sat., when such a pointing would allow us to keep close to the form of the MS., and give at the same time a possible scansion.

The use of ãfyrde may be regarded as similar to that in 67. Of course, the fiend did not actually drive Adam and Eve from paradise, but it was through his activity that they were expelled. Hè may be construed as the Anglian form of hïe, which we have met before. (Cf. Bouterwek's translation: 'was sie hernach entfernte.') This hè may be responsible for much of the confusion in the MS. at this point. Compare 479 with 128ᵃ.

481a. For the material on the derivation of neorxnawong, see Klaeber's bibliographical note in the Later Genesis, p. 53.

483a. On æpla, see Sievers, Gram. 273, n. 3.

484a. Barnouw (Textkrit. Untersuch., p. 108) says: 'In der am wenigsten formelhaft aussehenden wendung beorhtan blæda mag vom schreiber die urspr. starke endung in die schwache geändert sein, indem er das adv. þa für den bestimmten artikel hielt; oder ist dies þa etwa artikel?' He compares Chr. 694-5: þa / gimmas.

Cf. Gen. A 902: þa blǽda ǽt.

486a. On oferhygdon, see Sievers, Gram. 416, n. 4. Klaeber (Later Gen., p. 55) thinks the construction of oferhȳran (see variants) with the acc. would be doubtful.

487a. Klaeber (Anglia 37. 541) illuminates this rather cryptic phrase by citing it in connection with Gen. B 717: 'Hē ǽt þām wīfe onfēng helle and hinnsīð'; and Gen. A 936-8:

> oðþæt þē tō heortan hearde gripeð > ādl unlīðe, þē þū on æple ǽr > selfa forswulge.

He quotes from Hagenbach (Dogmengeschichte, § 63) Irenæus' statement that men 'simul enim cum esca [i. e., the apple] et mortem adsciverunt.'

A similar conception is to be found in Gu. 840-2, where death is called 'þone bitran drync, þone Ēve fyrn Ādāme geaf, byrelade brȳd geong.' This is expanded in Gu. 955-966. Cf. also Gen. A 893: 'Ǽte þā unfreme.'

487b. As the Heliand puts it (3596), 'thō uuarð im the hatola te nāh.'

489-490. Cf. Chr. 1415-8:

> Đā mec ongon hrēowan þæt mīn hondgeweorc > on fēonda geweald fēran sceolde, > moncynnes tuddor māncwealm sēon.

490. Cf. clom and carcern, 637; Chr. 734-5: ligeð in carcerne, clommum gefæstnad; An. 130, 1560.

Since the MS. has a metrical point after carcerne, and since þes is a word which might easily drop out, I accept Graz's modification of Ettmüller's reading.

491-493. Cf. Ælfric, Hom. 2. 6: 'þā nolde hē āsendan tō ūre ālȳsednysse nāðor nē engel, nē hēahengel, nē wītegan, nē apostolas, ac sende se Fæder his āncennedan Sunu.'

494. Cf. Chr. 1601: hwæt him se Waldend tō wrace gesette; El. 495: tō wræce ne sette.

495. Cf. Chr. 443-4: 'þā se Ælmihtiga ācenned wearð þurh clǽnne hād.'

497. There is no sufficient reason for altering the MS. reading of this line further than by transposing and (so Thorpe). Tintregan is gen. sing. (weak) after fela. 'Much torment and great grief' has nothing suspicious about it. The only objection to Thorpe's reading, namely, anacrusis in the second hemistich, is unimportant.

498. Cf. Ps. 54. 18: 'forðon mē manige ymb mægene syrewað'; and Bl. Hom. 83: 'hēr manige sētunga and searwa ādrēag æt Iūdēum.'

499a. So Gu. 582; Gen. 2349; Beow. 2269; Ph. 147, 478; El. 198.

499b. Cf. Gu. 195, 830.

500a. Bora is never found alone save in the MS. reading of this line, whereas it occurs frequently as the second member of a compound. The adjective rīce is used in the poetry once with rǣdbora (Pater Noster 3. 38), and once with rǣsbora (An. 385); but since rīces rǣdboran is perfectly intelligible, Dietrich's emendation to rīce is unnecessary.

500b. Hrefnan is spelled thus with h in the Lindisfarne Matthew (6. 24). The word is used in a similar context in Ph. 641-2, but in a passive sense: 'Þēah hē dēaþes cwealm on rōde trēow[e] ræfnan sceolde.' Translate the lines in Sat.: 'how they might bring to pass my death.'

501. So Gen. 1719.

503. Based on Lk. 3. 23. The first hemistich must be considered expanded, if gēara is retained. Cosijn refers to An. 157 for an instance of the omission of the unit of time measured.

504-506. The MS. reads: gemunde ic ðæs mænego / and (or ond) þā minan hām / lange þæs ðe ic of hæftum / hām gelǣdde. The form lange for langie is analogous to folge, which is found in the Rushworth gloss to Matthew. See Sievers, Gram. 412, n. 7; 416, n. 9. þæs ðe is used after langian in Soul's Address 155, with the meaning 'because.' A clearer case of a genitive after langian, which will illustrate the construction and meaning of þæs ðe here, is Bl. Hom. 227. 1: 'Hē for ðǣm dēaþe ne forhtode, ah hine ðæs heardost langode hwanne hē of ðisse worlde mōste.' Since þǣs for þās (see 504) is found in the plur. in Met. 20. 223, and elsewhere in Boethius, we may let stand this instance of ðǣs, construed as acc. sing. fem.

Thorpe, Grein, Dietrich, and Barnouw assume that the MS. reading þā minan is equivalent to German 'die Meinigen,' but the weak inflection of mīn never occurs elsewhere (nor for that matter the weak inflection of any of the possessives, except one very doubtful ūran). The Corrector hazarded minnan without fitting it into the context. Graz emended 504b to in þām minnan hām, and translated: 'da gedachte ich dieser menge in der verruchten heimat.' (The only pertinent parallel among those he cites is in þone lāðan hām, 178.) Graz, however, renders his interpretation impossible by canceling lange, because he thus leaves the construction of 505 uncertain. We may accept his emendation of 504^b (inserting on for in as a more natural source of MS. 7 = ond), and by retaining longe obtain an intelligible text. Aside from the corrupt hemistich, 504^b, that which has caused the most confusion concerning the signification of the passage is the fact that the conjunction þæt, introducing the clause which is the object of gemunde (i. e., ðæs mænego—earde), has been left unexpressed. Dietrich pointed this out in his note. Grein followed Dietrich's suggestion in his translation.

The lines as restored run thus: 'I was mindful that this company in this wretched home were longing that I should lead them from their bonds [to their heavenly home.'

There is some uncertainty about the meaning and derivation of minnan. The OE. dictionaries derive it from the same root as Goth. miniza and Lat. minus, and define it 'abjectus,' 'vilis,' 'mean,' 'vile,' whereas the NED. regards it as probably cognate with mān, and gives as the meaning 'wicked,' 'harmful.' Cosijn (PBB. 23. 118) having emended the two instances of min (or minne) in Gu. 622 and 881 to the required form of mirc, Holthausen proceeds to make away with the other instances which remain. He opines that min can be left out of the dictionaries, because the positive degree of this adjective is not found in other languages (see Anglia Bb. 16. 228). But it seems strange that, aside from the fact that some form of min(ne) is found three or four times in other OE. poems, the LWS. Corrector should have deliberately offered minnan as an emendation, if there were no such word. A mistake in spelling exactly like that of the MS. minan occurs in mine, Gu. 622.

The meaning of line 505 is intelligible without the expression of the object (i. e., hēo), and, since there are already five unaccented syllables in the first thesis, it is not advisable to add another (see variants).

Compare 505 with 553; also 506 with 554.

506b. The MS. reading of 554^b is similarly incomplete in its metre. Holthausen's sculon (sceolon is the spelling used in Sat.) is to be accepted in both cases.

507a. So Dan. 32, 745. Cf. Gloria 47: hāligdōmas.

508. The verbs here change to the present, for the future. Compare 508^a with 556, 593; and 508^b with 42.

509a = 236^a, 569^a, 632^a.

509b. This is evidently a vague reminiscence of Jesus' prayer for his executioners in Lk. 23. 34.

510-511. See Jn. 19. 34.

511a. The plural on galgum is never used for 'on the cross.' Galgum is undoubtedly a slip for galgan (cf. 550), due either to the influence of the preceding gārum, or to a confusion in the number of vertical strokes which compose the ending (see p. 137).

511b. Giunga means 'young man' = 'soldier.'

512b. So Dan. 441b.

The poet in 512-3 is following a chronology which is distinctly unorthodox. Something may possibly be omitted from the MS. after either 512 or 513, because Christ never alludes to the results of his being mindful of the saints in hell (i. e., his overthrow of Satan's power, and liberation of his faithful ones). Still, the poet may have considered that he had dwelt sufficiently on this theme, and that no further mention was necessary. At any rate, there can be no doubt but that 512 is in the right place, and that the poet intended to represent Christ as ascending to heaven immediately upon his crucifixion, and remaining there until early Sunday morning.

In the Gospel of Nicodemus, the impression is given that Christ came to harry hell immediately upon his giving up the ghost. Irenæus (Hær. 5. 31: Patr. Gr. 7. 1208) quotes numerous passages (among them that which Justin Martyr had accused the Jews of cutting out of Jeremiah) to prove that Christ's soul really went to the abode of the dead after the Crucifixion. Tertullian (De Anima 55: Patr. Lat. 2. 742) has the definite statement: 'Nec ante ascendit in sublimiora cœlorum, quam descendit in inferiora terrarum.' The Augustinian Sermo CLX (Patr. Lat. 39. 2061) reads thus: 'Mox ut spiritum reddit, unita suæ divinitati anima ad inferorum profunda descendit.' The same view is expressed by Dracontius (Carm. de Deo 528: Patr. Lat. 60. 812), and in OE. by the writer of the first Vercelli homily.

However, an interpretation which bears a distinct resemblance to that in Sat. is to be found in a sentence from Fulgentius Ruspensis, quoted by Monnier (p. 143, n. 1; the reference for a passage which he has just quoted is given as Ad Trasimundum 3. 34, but no separate reference is added for that which is of interest to us; as I was unable to locate the quotation in the vicinity of Ad Trasim. 3. 34, it must rest upon the authority of Monnier): 'Dominus ad Paradisum venit ut Adam a pœnis eriperetur; . . . prius Dominus cum latrone ad Paradisum quam pro Adam descendit ad Tartarum. Nam illum primo die descendens collocavit in requie, istum ascendens tertio die deduxit ad lucem.' Fulgentius here presupposes the belief held by some Fathers that the paradise to which the good thief and the patriarchs were led was not heaven, but the earthly paradise which Adam lost, and which was sometimes located underground, as here (descendens). Isidore mentions still another explanation. He says that some think that the 'limpidissimum subcœlestium spatiorum habitaculum,' whence the apostates fell (which must not be confused with the spiritual heaven), is reserved as a place of rest for the souls of the saints while they wait for the future resurrection, and that it was this paradise which Christ meant in his promise to the thief (De Ord. Creat.: Patr. Lat. 83. 926).

Some such ideas as these may be ultimately responsible for the poet's heresy in the present passage. Christ cannot correctly be thought to have ascended to his Father before the Resurrection, because of his words to Mary (Jn. 20. 17): 'Noli me tangere, nondum enim ascendi ad Patrem meum.' Yet the poet is not wrong, in so far as he represents Christ as visiting some blissful place after his death, because this is implied in the definite promise to the thief in Lk. 23. 43.

The gap may be located after 513 as well as anywhere. Tō, then, will have the sense of 'from,' as in 686. Graz's division of the phrase, tō . . . hāligum Drihtne, to prevent tō from being anacrustic, is unnecessary, because prepositions are used as anacrusis occasionally.

514a. wuldres Weard. So Gen. 941; Chr. 527; El. 84. Compare 514 with 661.

515. Holthausen's transposition of ǣr gives a normal line.

516b. Cf. Chr. 467; El. 187. The Blickling homilist (89. 32) says: 'Mid þon þe Drihten þā þā herehȳþþ þe [? omit þe] on helle genumen hæfde, raþe hē lifgende ūt ēode of his byrgenne mid his āgenre mihte āweht.' Cf. also the Augustinian sermon (Patr. Lat. 39. 2061): 'Facta præda in inferno vivus exiit de sepulchro; ipse se sua potentia suscitavit, etc.' Earlier accounts of the Harrowing, as noted above, conceived it as occurring on Friday afternoon, probably because of the influence of Mt. 27. 52. In considering the various chronological permutations and combinations in the accounts of the events subsequent to the Crucifixion, one should keep in mind the tendency, which the various writers exhibit, to follow the practise of Pseudo-Augustine, who introduces his version with the phrase, 'ut hæc breviter cuncta perstringam.'

517b. Grein's emendation is obviously correct.

521a. On is in later times a common colloquial or dialectal substitute for of, especially when used with out; i. e., out on = out of. One can never be sure when such expressions began to be used, and therefore on should be left in the text here. There are other somewhat similar cases in Sat., where on is the preposition which governs the noun denoting the source whence something is taken, and which we must translate by 'from'; see, e. g., 417.

521b-522. Compare the spelling of gefatian with fatas (Lind. Gosp., Lk. 20. 35) and fatiga (Wulfstan, Hom. 227. 8).

None of the cognates of gefatian ever seem to have the meaning 'bring news,' 'tell' (Kennedy), 'künden' (Grein), but, as Cosijn remarks, the verb is always transitive. It means either 'fetch' or 'summon,' always with the acc. Therefore the lines mean: 'He bade the shining angels summon his eleven followers.'

The MS. winum (or sinum) would upset the metre, and might be explained as merely a wild guess of the scribe at the signification of some gloss like wine or winas, which had crept into the text through conflation.

For the englas eallbeorhte see Lk. 24. 4; Jn. 20. 12; and, for their message to the eleven and Peter, Mk. 16. 7; 14. 28; also Mt. 28. 7; 26. 32. The spelling andleofan is not found elsewhere. The 7 in the MS. may well represent and. It is to be noted that in the Biblical accounts, the angels do not communicate their message directly to the disciples, but entrust it to the women to be delivered. The version of this incident in the Heliand (5834-43), though closer to the Bible, is very similar to that in Sat.:

> Hiet sia eft thanan > fan them grabe gangan endi faran te thēm iungrun Cristes, > seggian thēm is gisīthun suothun uuordun, > that irō Drohtin uuas fan dōðe astandan;
> hiet ōc an sundron Sīmon Pētruse > uuillspell mikil uuordun cūthian, > cumi Drohtines, iac that Crist selbo > uuas· an Galilēo land, 'thār ina eft is iungron sculun > gisehan, is gisīthōs, sō hie im ēr selbo gisprac > uuārun uuordun.'

522a. Cf. Dan. 337; Chr. 506, 548, 881, 1277.

525b. Cf. 117, 279.

527. gāstes blēd. Cf. 646.

529-531b. The MS. reads thus: hāligne Godas Sunu / swā hīe gesēgon / hwēr Sunu Meotodes / þā gingron on upp / stōd ēce· Drihten. These lines are in a badly confused state, and none of the attempts at restoration have been wholly successful. The gingron which stands before on in the MS. (530) begins a new page, and is probably anticipated from 531b. We need not suspect þā, the last word of the preceding page; it may be retained as an adv. The metre demands a light syllable between upp and stōd, and Holthausen's gestōd may be accepted provisionally. The best that can be done is to reproduce Wülker's pointing, with Holthausen's emendation.

The general drift of these and the following lines is clear enough.
The incidents which the poet describes are told in Mt. 28. 16-7.
Upp corresponds to the 'montem' of v. 16, and 533 renders v. 17:
'videntes eum, adoraverunt.' The importance of Peter's rôle in this passage is ultimately derived from Jn. 21. 1 ff., but Peter's actions and words in Sat. are in no way similar to what is recorded in the Gospel.

533a. Cf. 546ᵃ.

534a. Cf. Gn. 750: þoncade þeodne.

534b. Cf. 569ᵇ.

535b. Cf. 563ᵇ.

537a. 'Is it thou, Lord?'

537b = Beow. 1645ᵇ; cf. Jud. 300: dōme gedȳrsod.

538b. So Met. 9. 23.

539. Cf. this construction in Rid. 4. 13-5; 21. 29-30; An. 1192. The c of þec has a cancelation point under it in the MS. (put there probably by the Corrector). An accent above e has become blurred. These two facts show that either the scribe or the Corrector thought the pronoun emphatic enough to receive the metrical stress, and we may acquiesce in that opinion. In the MS., the cæsural point comes before on. Adverbial on is usually stressed; hence Bright locates the cæsura after on, and suggests for the b-verse lāðe benda. The MS. reading is perfectly clear, and, since an unaccented adverbial on is found in Deor 6ᵇ (followed, however, in that instance, immediately by the verb), there is no necessity of alteration.

Bl. Hom. 17. 1 mentions Christ's heardan bendas.

540a. The MS. form hæþenne is probably due to the influence of lāðne. For another possible explanation, cf. Sievers, Gram. 231, n. 3.

540b. Cf. Gen. B 816, 819.

541a. Endestæf is found in Beow. 1753; An. 135; Jul. 610; Fates of Men 11.

542-545. This passage is both syntactically and logically incoherent. The poet began by following his chief source of lines 526-545, Mt. 28. (We are told in verse 17, that 'quidam autem dubitaverunt.' Cf. the WS. version: 'sume hig twēonedon.') Then, of course, the story of doubting Thomas at once came to mind; this made him forget that he had begun his sentence in the plur., and he naturally used the sing. in the rest of the sentence, which refers to Thomas alone. (For the story of Thomas, see Jn. 20. 24-30.)

The lines might be explained in another way. Genōm might be a mistake for genōmon. Hē in the original might have been an Anglian nom. plur. By this interpretation, 543ᵇ would be merely parenthetical.

Mōd is an uninflected instrumental (found often enough in the prose), unless we may assume elision before on-. Compare the MS. reading of Gen. 1957.

543a. The hemistich certainly means: 'that it was the Dear One (i. e., Christ).' Se dēora has no point if applied to Didymus. Moreover, such an interpretation renders the sequence of the passage unintelligible. Compare with se Dîora the Lîofne of 155; his se dîora Sunu, 243; and Harrowing 70: Dryhten mîn se dîora. Groschopp (p. 254) and Barnouw (p. 105) suggested this interpretation of se Dîora; but the latter assumes a gap in the MS. after the phrase, which is wholly unnecessary. The only lacuna was in the poet's thought.

543b. Cf. Jn. 20. 24: 'qui dicitur Didymus.'

544. Cf. 680A.

546. Emendation here not only is not needed, but would actually obscure the true meaning of the line. Not one but two 'baths of baptism' are intended by the poet. His conception is based upon an interpretation of Jn. 19. 34 which was easily accessible to a mediæval writer, but one which was coming to be obscured by another that in time completely suppressed it (see Westcott in the Bible Commentary, ad loc.). The verse in St. John relates that after Jesus' death, one of the soldiers pierced his side with a lance. 'Et continuo exivit sanguis et aqua.' According to the dominant exegesis, the water and blood signify the sacraments of baptism and the eucharist. But a second theory existed alongside of this for centuries. Starting from such verses as Mk. 10. 38 and 1 Jn. 5. 6, certain Fathers regarded Christ's passion itself as a second baptism of martyrdom. The following passages will show the full development of this view. Cyril of Jerusalem writes (Cat. 3. 10, Lat. version, Patr. Gr. 33. 439): 'Latus transfixus sanguinem et aquam emisit: ut alii quidem pacis tempore per aquam, alii vero persecutionum temporibus propriis sanguinibus baptizentur.' Euthymius Zigabenus (Comment. in Joan., Lat. version, Patr. Gr. 129. 1474) describes the water and blood as 'duo designans baptismata, unum quidem per sanguinis martyrium, alterum vero per aquæ regenerationem.' Tertullian (De Pudic. 22: Patr. Lat. 2. 1028) is still closer to the text of Christ and Satan: 'Hos duos baptismos de vulnere perfossi lateris emisit.' Rufinus (Comment. in Symbolum Apost.: Patr. Lat. 21. 361) speaks of the 'duplicem gratiam baptismi. Unam quæ datur per aquæ baptismum, aliam quæ per martyrium profusione sanguinis quæritur: utrumque enim baptismum nominatur.' Cf. also the lines in the 12th century hymn in Mone 1. 97:

> lavans e tuo latere
> nos munda vita vetere.

For interesting expositions of the more usual theory, see Prudentius, Cathem. 9. 85 (Patr. Lat. 59); and Dittoch. 165 (Patr. Lat. 60. 108); Sedulius, Pasch. Carm. 5. 287; and, in OE., Ælfric, Hom. 2. 260. The blood and water are mentioned in Chr. 1112-5; Jul. 292.

BaÞe may be considered either a scribal blunder for babu... or merely a somewhat unusual form of the same. Cf. Sieve... 237, n. 5; 240.

545. Cf. swāt forlētan in a causative sense in An. 96... 1112.

546b. Cf. An. 1640; El. 490, 1033: fulwihtes baÞ.

547-557. The tone of these lines recalls the hortatory p... 1-365.

547. Frēodrihten. So 566.

549a. For the conception of Christ's 'ascending' the cr... Rood 34, 40; Chr. 727, 1172.

549b. Cf. An. 1449b.

550b. Cf. Chr. 145, 319.

552b. In view of the word secgan in 552a, it is possibl... Dietrich's wordum represents the original; yet the tauto... phrase is perfectly clear, and it has been left undisturbed. S... as it is, weorcum could hardly be a misreading, although it migh... been substituted for wordum through carelessness or a slip of me... in copying.

553-555. Cf. 402-3 and 361. The whole passage, 553-6, ... similar to 505b-8 that we are justified in accepting Holthausen's ... (sceolon) and Bouterwek's restoration of 555. This permits ... reach 556 without a metrical gap. Graz's reduction of 556 to ... of normal length by reading wunian in wynnum would rende... passage still more like 505b-8, and his theory that the omission o... might have caused a scribe to expand wunian in wynnum t... hemistichs (i. e., 556a as printed in the text) is ingenious. Lin... as it stands is a slightly irregular expanded C-verse. Compa... rhythm of Dan. 455a.

556b-557a. Cf. 594; Chr. 1673; Gu. 457; An. 105; and esp... An. 611-2: Ēow is wuldres lēoht torht ontȳned, gif gē teala h...

557b. Cf. Wond. of Creat. 20: Þencan forð teala; Dom... sē nēð wel Þenceð.

558-559. Cf. the specification of the length of the interval be... the Resurrection and the Ascension in Chr. 466-7, and Credo ...

559-560a. Kock (Anglia 44. 258-9) takes exception to the ... pretation of folgad folcum as 'bedient von den völkern,' on the g... that folgian is an intransitive verb. He would simply remove ... from the place where it does not fit, and put it in again ... mancynnes. He translates the phrase: 'help of men.' This re... ing he thinks justified by the facts that ON. fylgð sometimes ... 'help,' and that God is ealra cyninga help in Pater Noster 3. ... The only objection that could be offered is that there is no ev...

that folgad could mean 'help' in OE., whereas in ON. this meaning is well attested. It seems not impossible that the poet in a special instance might lose sight of the fact that folgian is intransitive, and use folgad as we should in Mod. E., i. e., to mean 'followed' (of course, not 'served,' which in the context makes nonsense). Kock objected that Christ was not 'bedient von den völkern' for forty days.
But flowertig daga need not be applied more particularly to folgad than to was on eorðan or gecyðed; and if we take a synthetic view of the Gospel passages dealing with the post-resurrection period, as the poet would certainly do, it becomes evident that in the trips to Galilee, back to Jerusalem, and out to Bethany, Christ was 'followed by people.' Since the laws of alliteration demand some change, I have accepted for the text Grein's suggestion that the order of the two hemistichs of 559, as they read in the MS., should be reversed.

Cosijn thought folgad to be a correction offered by the scribe for a dittograph of folcum, which stood in his copy. Cosijn therefore canceled it, printing 559-560ᵃ thus: folcum gecyðed flowertig daga Meotod mancynnes.

Shipley (Gen. Case in A.-S. Poetry, p. 65) believes that MS. mancynnes cannot be construed as gen. after gecyðed. Wülker had connected the word with folcum; Shipley would refer it back to ēce Drihten. Grein's mancynne is preferable to such strained constructions.

560b. Cf. note on 139.

561a. Burhlēod occurs only in Sat. and Jud. 175, 187.

562a. Thorpe brings out the clever interpretation of 560ᵇ-2: 'ere he into the great creation . . . would bring his holy spirit to heaven's kingdom.' One is at a loss to make out what event or conception Bouterwek, Grein, and Kennedy think the poet is alluding to, when they render hāligne gāst by 'den heiligen Geist' and 'the Holy Spirit.' 560ᵇ-2 obviously introduce the account of the Ascension, not Pentecost.

For this mode of describing Christ's movements, cf. Bl. Hom. 85.
4: 'hē þā onsende his þone wuldorfæstan gāst tō helle grunde.'

563-569. Compare the version of the Ascension story in Chr.
458-532.

564b and 568-569b. Compare 564ᵇ with 403. The swēg, of course, comes from the angel hosts, not the clouds themselves. For the mention of clouds in connection with the Ascension, see Acts 1. 9.

Cf. An. 88-9: cōm wuldres tācen hālig of heofenum; Gu. 1256-7: ða cwōm lēohta mǣst hālig of heofonum. Note the description of the angel's music at the ascension of Guthlac's soul (Gu. 1288-90).
For the angels cf. Chr. 491-5:

> Đā wearð semninga swēg on lyfte > hlûd gehŷred : heofonengla þrēat, > weorud wlitescŷne, wuldres āras, > cwōmun on corðre ;

and also the description of the angel host at the Last Judgment, Chr. 928-9 :

> ond him on healfa gehwo[n]e heofonengla þrēat > ymbûtan farað.

See Cook's note on Chr. 494.

570a. Cf. 346ᵇ.

570b. None of the proposed restorations of this line fit the context. Christ was neither mid niððum (the reading proposed by Grein and Holthausen) nor 'hieni̯eder' (Grein's translation) during the ten days between the Ascension and Pentecost. As a possibility, I suggest for 570ᵇ, nēosade weras (or wera). The line with this reading would mean: 'while yet Christ the Saviour visited mankind;' i. e., before Christ's supernatural manifestations of himself to men were intermitted. (Or should one say became very rare, since, because of the universal belief in visions, no one in the Middle Ages could have thought of them as ceasing entirely?) Nēosian is frequently used to signify God's visitation to mankind, sometimes for the Lat. visitare.

571. Bright's note has completely elucidated this line, and must be reproduced at least in part. After alluding to Holthausen's emendation of twelf to endleofan, which had been proposed in order to restore the alliteration, and to bring the line into harmony with such Biblical verses as Mt. 28. 16, Mk. 16. 14, and Lk. 24. 33, Bright continues : 'The passage surely relates to the Pentecostal gift of the Spirit. (Gāstes gife), which, of course, took place ten days after the Ascension, the event spoken of in the immediately preceding lines as having occurred forty days . . . after the Resurrection. Ælfric is specific in saying that the Pentecostal gift was given on þām endleoftan dæge Crīstes ûpâstīges (Hom. I. 298), and the duration of the period of waiting for the fulfillment of the promise is expressed in Christ 542 by tŷn niht. [I may add that the eleventh Blickling homily (117. 14) is still more explicit, and nearer to the text of Sat. as well: 'ac nǣron hīe þā gŷt þā hālgan mid þon godcundan Gāste swā getrymede, swā hīe sōna emb tēn niht wǣron;' (119. 13) 'hē þē tēoþan dæge him þone Hālgan Gāst onsende;' see also the twelfth homily, 131. 8.] The context therefore would require the same specific designation of time, measured from the foregoing limit of the 'forty days,' inasmuch as the poet is clearly following the record of the beginning of the Acts. He puts appropriate stress upon such details as the date of the gift of the Spirit (Acts 2. 1 . . .); the restored number of the disciples—restored to twelve by the election of Matthias [Acts 1. 16-26]; the defection of Judas, of which so much is said in the same connection (Acts 1. 16 ff.); and the great number of souls (sáwla unrîm) established in the new faith (vid. Ælfric, Hom. 1. 316). Moreover, to confirm this interpretation in a striking manner, it will be noticed that the poet, according to his original, Acts 1. 26, here names the disciples 'apostolas' (cf. the only other occurrence of this name in the poetry, Men. 122: Petrus and Paulus: hwæt, þā apostolas). We therefore must conclude to read the line . . .: þæt hē þæs ymb tŷn niht twelf apostolas.'

Bright then proceeds to correct the metre 'by transposing the adverbial þæs to the emphatic position': þæt hē ymb tŷn niht þæs (cf. Men. 41, 131, 137, etc.). But this is to do unnecessary violence to the text. In a document for which an Anglian original may be so safely assumed, there can be no objection to accepting tēne for tŷn. The metre of the line then becomes almost identical with that of Men. 19. Moreover, tēne in OE. script would have been much more likely to be mistaken for āne than tŷn. If such a form as tîne should by any chance have been in the scribe's copy, the possibility of mis-reading would have been still greater. (Tîn and tîene are to be found, but not tînc.)

572a. gǣstes gife. Cf. An. 530-1.

573. Cf. Acts 2. 41: 'et appositæ sunt in die illa animæ circiter tria millia.' Gesette looks like a translation, or possibly a mistrans-lation, of appositæ sunt, turned into the active voice.

575. Klaeber (Anglia 27. 258) compares this with his frēond . . . on gold bebycgan, which is found in Bede's Hist. Eccl. (130. 32). He describes it as 'a rare archaic construction,' as in Beow. 2799. Dietrich explains the idiom thus: '[In den] älteren dialecte[n] . . . [wird] das gut . . . in gelt verwandelt. . . . So im altn. seldi hann iarðir sinar til silfrs.'

Compare this reference to Judas with Bl. Hom. 63. 7; 69. 13.

576b. Cf. Verc. hom., fol. 114ᵇ: him se rǣd ne gebāh.

578b. Cf. 418.

579a. So 713ᵃ, etc.

580. Cf. Mk. 16. 19. See also 611; Chr. 531-2; Hymn 30-1.

Graz, in support of his omission of hond, cites several instances from the OE. Psalms in which swîðre is used alone to denote the right hand.

581-58a. Cf. Chr. 427-8:

> his forgifnesse gumum tō helpe > dǣleð dôgra gehwām, Dryhten weoroda.

For help and hâlo see Gu. 655, 86a; Run. 28.

583b. Cf. Deor 19: þet wæs monegum câþ.

584-585a. Cf. An. 325-6, 702-3: Wealdend and Wyrhta wuldor-brymmes, ðn éce God eallra gesceafta; Met. 30. 14: Waldend and Wyrhta weorulde gesceafta. Cf. Wulfstan, Hom. 21. 19; 73. 6; 107. 32; 108. 5.

585b = 392b.

586b. Cf. 81b. Dietrich remarks on 586b: 'Von Christus ausge-sagt verstösst die benennung "ein heiliger engel" gegen das bestimmt-este bewusstsein des ganzen christlichen alterthums.' Yet the con-ception of Christ as an angel was not unknown, and may have found its way into the poem through a misunderstanding or confused recol-lection of some passage in which this heretical view was combated. Harnack (Dogmengesch. 1. 204, n. 4) says: ' "Angelus" ist eine sehr alte bezeichnung für Christus (s. Justins Dialog), die sich bis zum nicänischen streit erhalten hat und z. b. noch in Novatians schrift de trinit. 11. 25 ff. ausdrücklich für ihn in anspruch genommen wird (ATliche stellen, die auf Christus bezogen wurden, schützten das wort). In der regel ist es aber nicht als bezeichnung des wesens (so jedoch bei Hermas: Jesus = Michael), sondern als solche des amtes Christi zu verstehen; . . . es gab Christen, die das wort als wesens-bezeichnung gebrauchten und von alten zeiten her findet sich ein widerspruch gegen diese auffassung.' See also Dorner, Entwick-lungsgesch. der Lehre von der Person Christi (2d ed. 1. 568). Tertullian writes a long refutation of this doctrine as it was held by the Gnostics, Marcion and Apelles, in De Carne Christi 8 and 14 (Patr. Lat. 2. 769, 777). An interesting apocryphal passage relating to the Messiah is found in the Testament of Daniel (Testam. Duodecem Patriarchorum): 'Draw near unto God and to the Angel that intercedeth for you, for He is a mediator between God and man.' In Chr. 104 the Saviour is called engla beorhtast, but we should be too rigid in our logic if we interpreted that to mean that Christ is necessarily to be included among the angels of which he is the brightest. But see Cook's note in his edition.

587a. For the association of the saints with Christ in the rule of the heavenly kingdom, cf. Rev. 3. 21: 'Qui vicerit, dabo ei sedere mecum in throno meo;' also Rev. 2. 26. In Rev. 20. 4 we are told that the righteous reigned with Christ a thousand years. See also Mt. 19. 28.

587b. Cf. Gen. 11b.

588b. Sievers, in his collation, correctly deciphered the MS. as having originally read swegl betalden. The Corrector canceled the t, and wrote he above it. But behealden is, as Dietrich puts it, 'verwissert.' Junius, Dietrich, and Grein prefer befalden, and write the hemistich as one word. But an f was not nearly so likely to be mistaken for a t as an o for an a. Betolden gives every bit as good a sense as befalden (for which cf. symnum bifealdne, Chr. 117). A hemistich very similar to 588ᵇ occurs in Ph. 609ᵇ, where it is said that the righteous 'in wlite wuniað, wuldre bitolden.' Since such a verbal compound as sweglbeteldan (or -befaldan or -behealdan) is at least problematical, it is better to construe swegl as an uninflected instrumental. However, both modes of dealing with the word come to much the same thing. Translate: 'The Son of glory hath his dwelling enfolded in (or covered with) ether.' The metaphor is a bold one.

589-591. Cf. the phrasing of 361-2 and Bl. Hom. 7. 9: '[Israhela cyn] tō heofona rīce laþode.' Lǣcedōm is found elsewhere in the poetry only in Chr. 1573. Lines 589-597 form still another passage in the hortatory vein, like those in 1-365. On laðað, see the note to 632.

594b. Dietrich's teala restores the metre, and is supported by such phrases as: þām ðe teala þenceð (557); An. 1612: gif gē teala hycgað; and Wonders of Creat. 20: þencan forð teala.

595. Cf. 364, 645.

596a. Cf. Gu. 277.

596b-597. See the comparison in 213.

598. This formula meets us also in Dom. 5: 'Hafað him geþinged hider Þēoden ūser on þām mǣstan dæge;' and in the homily written in the margin of MS. 41, Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (see Mod. Phil. 1. 611): 'Ūre Drihten hafað eft geþingod heder on þisne middangeard.' Cf. Wulfstan, Hom. 250. 16: 'hū hē him on ðās weoruld þingian ongan.'

The Last Judgment is described at some length in the following OE. poems: Ex. 539-547; Chr. 868 ff.; Be Domes Dæge; El. 1276 ff.; Ph. 491 ff.; Soul's Address; Rood 103-121. Two works which discuss the OE. treatments of this theme are: Deering's Anglosaxon Poets on the Judgment Day, and Grau's Quellen und Verwandtschaften der Älteren Germanischen Darstellungen des Jüngsten Gerichtes.

598b. Cf. Þēoden mǣra, Gen. 2144.

600. Stoddard (Anglia 10. 162) calls attention to the repetition of on, which in the MS. is the last word on p. 226, and the first on p. 227, as final proof that Thorpe was wrong in assuming the loss of a leaf at this point.

601-603. See the blowing of the trumpets in Chr. 879-883 and Dom. 109-112; also Mt. 24. 31 ('Et mittet angelos suos cum tuba, et voce magna; et congregabunt electos eius a quatuor ventis'); 1 Cor. 15. 52; 1 Thess. 4. 15.

60a. So Chr. 1240[b].

603. The parallel in Chr. 879 (from fĩowerum foldan scĩatum) makes Grein's emendation, as modified by Holthausen, a very appropriate correction.

605b. Cf. 232[b].

606. Cf. the homily in MS. Hatton 116 (Förster, 130. 6): þone langan dōmesdæg. For the din of Doomsday, cf. Chr. 834-5, 931, 949, 954-5; Dom. 59.

607a. Cf. Chr. 492[a].

608a. See Rev. 1. 7; Mt. 24. 30; Dan. 7. 13.

609a. Both metre and sense make gescĕarian preferable to the MS. gescĕawian. With the latter the verse would have to be scanned ∠××× | ×⏜ | ⏜×, with only the first word alliterating, an arrangement found nowhere else. Gescĕawian would have to mean in this context 'make manifest,' 'exhibit.' But, since the poet is following Mt. 25. 31 ff. in the main outlines of his Judgment scene, it is better to accept gescearian as a rendering of the Lat. separabit.

Gescearian (for gescirian) is usually defined 'ordain,' 'allot,' 'assign,' 'number,' but there is no reason why the word may not have its radical sense of 'separate,' 'divide.' B.-T. Sup. cites one case of gescirian with this meaning, and āscirian has it almost exclusively. It is better to accept gescĕarian than Thorpe's gescĕadan. Because of the similar appearance of OE. w and r, a scribe would be more likely to mistake the former word for gescĕawian than the latter.

609b. Note the recurrence of the conception that righteousness is beautiful; cf. 211[b].

611a. See Barnouw (op. cit., p. 105) on this use of the weak adj.

611 ff. The dependence of this passage upon Mt. 25. 31 ff., which is the ultimate source, is only very general.

615. Cf. 360.

616a. Cf. 671[b], 697[b]; Gen. 978; Ex. 420; Chr. 687; An. 1603.

616b. Cf. the phrasing of 627[b].

617-619. Cf. Mt. 25. 34: 'Venite, benedicti Patris mei; possidete paratum vobis regnum a constitutione mundi.'

619. Cf. 362.

620-622. Cf. Verc. hom., fol. 21[a]: 'þonne standað forhte and afærede þā þe ær wirigdon and unriht worhton, and swið betwyh him hēofað and wēpað hwylcne dōm him Dryhten dēman wille.' See also the fear of the wicked in Chr. 801, 921, 1230-2, 1560-2; Jul. 706-711 (cf. the fear of the angels in Chr. 1020). Since forht and forworht are both used in connection with Doomsday, it is natural that a scribe should have confused them, without taking notice of the metrical requirements. The confusion may have existed in the present scribe's copy, since the same mistake appears in the work of the man who wrote 1-125, viz., in 76.

Translate 621-2: 'They shall tremble for fear of the time when the Son of God will judge them.'

622b. Cf. þurh þinra dǣda spǣd, Ps. 118. 91.

623a = 109ᵇ.

626. The original form in the MS. was probably reodende, -ande, or -unde, a mistake for reordende, -ande, or -unde. The Corrector changed this to reordiende. Thorpe's rodera Waldend is the best stop-gap for 626ᵇ.

627. Compare the phrasing of 241. The Corrector thought gecweð a mistake for gecwyð, and so it might be. The context demands the present. I leave gecweð unchanged, because it could be a northern equivalent of gecwyð; see Sievers, Gram. 370, n. 7; 371; 391, n. 5.

628-629. Based on Mt. 25. 41. Cf. 691; Gu. 226; Chr. 1520; witchūs occurs only in Gen. 39 and Chr. 1536.

629b. This recalls Mt. 25. 12.

630b. Cf. 126, 731; Gen. 90.

630-634. This incident is not to be found in Matthew's detailed account of the Judgment, but the poet was not drawing on his invention for it. In MS. B of the Ethiopic version of the Book of Enoch (62. 11) we are told that 'the angels of punishment shall take [the damned] in charge to execute vengeance upon them;' but these angels of punishment are not at all to be confused with devils. Ephraem Syrus (Opera 3. 133) describes how the soul of the evil man at his death 'abit, tractus ab angelis malis in locum supplicii.' According to the fifteenth Vercelli homily (Förster, 128. 3), after Christ's malediction of the wicked, 'þonne gesamniað ðā dioflu hie tōsomne, and hīe ðonne drīfað þā synfullan and þā cearfullan sāwla tō helle.' The homily in MS. 41, Corp. Chr. Coll. Cambr. (Mod. Phil. I. 613), contains the same idea. There may be some connection between the OE. passages and Mt. 13. 49-50: 'Sic erit in consummatione sæculi: exibunt angeli, et separabunt malos de medio justorum; et mittent eos in caminum ignis.'

631. Cf. Beow. 163: hwyder helrūnan hwyrftum scrīþað. Schücking (Eng. Stud. 56. 171) says of scrīðan that if it meant 'schreiten,' 'gehen' primarily, we should expect to find it used occasionally of living human beings, but it is thus used only once, in Wids. 135 (for 'wander about'). Where it has been thought to mean 'schreiten,' 'gehen,' non-human beings are in question, as in Sat. 631, Beow. 163 and 703. It is probable that the word signifies a ghostly gliding movement. With this interpretation the phrase hwyrftum scriþað þæendmælum is highly poetic in the present context.

632. The scribe's original form leaðað was no error. The Corrector either did recognize laðian in this form, which has resulted from o/a-umlaut (Sievers, Gram. 160. 4; on the ending, see 412, n. 6), and thought it a mistake for lēðað, or he considered that his lędað suited the context better than laðiað (The latter alternative is certainly the true one, because the Corrector merely changed leaðað to laðað in 589, where laðian was obviously the right word.) It is, indeed, rather hard to believe that the poet did not write originally lēðað. Yet compare the homily on Doomsday in Assmann's Homilien und Heiligenleben (p. 167): 'God ûs laðaþ tô lîfe, and dēofol ûs laðaþ tô wîte.' Some one has erased he before þider. This was very probably an acc. plur. pronoun, object of the verbs, which really need some such explicit word to govern.

634a. Cf. Gen. B 697a. The 𐌸 of the MS. may be an error for þone.

634b. Cf. 377b.

635. ûp þonan. Cf. 327.

636a. Cf. wîte þolian in Gen. B 323, 367; Chr. 1452.

636b. Ph. 644 supports Grein's emendation, which was proposed for the sake of the alliteration. Moreover, þearlic is really a more fitting adjective for wîte, because earmlic always in the poetry modifies a word connoting rather subjective suffering than objective torment.

636-638. Cf. Chr. 1514-5: 'þæs gē sceolon hearde ādrēogan wîte tō widan ealdre, wræc mid dēoflum geþolian.'

Sievers and Graz would render 638b a normal B-verse by reading spel.

639-641. on edwît oft āsettað. Cf. Gen. 2728; Gu. 459. The object of āsettað in 639 is the clause introduced by þær ðe, which also stands in a sort of appositive relation to fæhðe and firne. I construe the passage thus, because the phrase settan on edwît in every instance has a direct as well as an indirect object, of which the former usually takes the shape of an object clause. Stæleð fæhðe and firne, then, is practically a parallel to on edwît āsettað. Since it seems unlikely that such a period would be broken into by a change of number in the subject which would add nothing to, and would really weaken, the thought, I have proposed feondas (parallel to swearte sûslbonan) as the subject of stæleð. This completes line 640 more satisfactorily than Sātān, which would give a line with four alliterating s's. The very uncommon alliteration s, s : st itself presents quite a sufficient amount of irregularity. On the possibility of a plural verb in -eð, see Sievers, Gram. 360, n. 2. Bouterwek (p. CCXXXIV) has already suggested that stæleð is written for stælað. The scribe is clearly hurrying and cramping his writing in this whole section, which increases the chances that he may have omitted such a word as fēondas, and left the sentence in confusion, because he did not stop to figure out its meaning.

Kock (Anglia 27. 229-233) was the first to explain completely the phrase, stæleð fæhðe and firne, although Cosijn must be credited with the actual emendation. (The MS. reads fæhðe and in firne.) According to Kock, '(ge)stælan hwæt on hwone means "lay something to somebody's charge," hence "call him to account for it," "avenge it on him." In the majority of sentences quoted by Bosworth-Toller, the idea of charging, or accusing, or upbraiding is quite distinct. . . . The object of the active (the subject of the passive) clause is in each case a real or imputed crime or injury.' Kock notes the presence of the formula fæhðe and firne in Beow. 137, 879, 2480, and, reversed, in 153. For stælan fæhðe (fyrene) see Gen. 1351; Beow. 1340; Gu. 1044; Chr. 1374.

Bright's assumption that on is accented is unwarranted (see variants for his alternative readings).

641. Cf. the first instance in which Grein's Frēodrihten restored the alliteration, 435, and see 547, 566.

643. Cf. 176, and especially Father's Instruction 63: weoruda Scyppend hafa þē tō hyhte.

There are two passages in the Vercelli homilies that are similar to 638-643. Both refer to the accusation of the wicked by devils on Doomsday before the final sentence is pronounced (not after, as here). In the first (fol. 66b-7b), the Devil addresses his accusation to God, and says: 'þíne sōðfæstan lāre hīe forgēaton;' and the homilist adds: '[Sátán] þā misdæda stæleð on þā gæstas.' Similarly, in the second (fol. 115a), men are enjoined to be mindful 'hū ðā dioflu him on stælað ealle þā unrihtan weorc.'

644a-645. Cf. 594b-5. See also 183, 364.

646b. gæstes blēd. Cf. 527b.

648. The MS. swegletorht (or to be exact swegle · torht) might stand for a northern uninflected acc. sing. masc. swegltorht, modifying sunu (= Christ). See Carpenter, Deklin. in . . . der Lindisf. Hs., p. 17. Grein, in a note, suggested swegltorhtne. The word is elsewhere applied only to the sun or stars, or to the heavenly home. I suspect that the scribe inadvertently inserted torht between swegle and sunu, through the influence of the common phrase, swegltorht sunne, which lingered in his mind. Grein had suggested by a query in his note that sunu might be nom. plur. He follows this up in the Sprachschats by canceling torht. Swegle would then be the regular dat. (? inst.) object of mid, and would mean 'ether,' or possibly 'harmony,' 'music'; the ëadige sunu would be the same as the ëadige bearn of 144.

649. In Rev. 21. 21, the gates of the New Jerusalem are of pearl. Could this line be a reminiscence of þá gyldnan geatu, Chr. 251?

650b–651. Cf. 617ᵇ-8ᵃ.

652–653. Cf. 295-6, 307-9.

653–655. Thus in Assmann's Ags. Homilien und Heiligenleben, p. 166, there are enumerated among the dwellers in heaven, 'englas and heahfædras, and witegan, and ealle hälie.'

655b. Cf. 184, 305.

657a. Cf. 258; Chr. 578.

657b. So Pater Noster 3. 12ᵇ.

658–660. The fourth Vercelli homily (fol. 20ᵇ) contains a long address of praise and thanksgiving, which the redeemed soul makes to the Lord after it has been awarded everlasting bliss.

658b and 659a. Brown (Lang. of Rushw. Gloss to Matt. 2. 79-80) records three instances of weak nom. sing. masc. nouns in -an. However, the forms in the MS. of Sat. are probably mere errors.

660. See note on 678-680.

661. See Introduction, p. lv, n. 82.

661b. Cf. Gen. 2; Beow. 3176; El. 892.

662a. Cf. 155ᵃ; An. 871:

> Ūtan ymbe Æðelne englas stōdon, > þegnas ymb Þēoden þūsendmǽlum > heredon on hēhðo hālgan stefne > dryhtna Dryhten: drēam wæs on hyhte.

Cf. also Sat. 45-8.

662b. Cf. Rood 139: þǽr is blis mycel.

665–667. These lines are transitional, and introduce the account of the temptation. Bouterwek, indeed, groups them with the preceding passage. Line 669ᵇ also forms a connecting link between 665-733 and the rest of the poem.

665b–666a. Cf. Bl. Hom. 85. 2: 'dēað hē geþrōwode for ūs.'

666b. So 388ᵇ.

669–671. The text could be translated as it stands: "Then it befell the accursed one who was formerly cast out of heaven that he dived into hell (or had to dive into hell) when he tempted (or after he had tempted) the King of Creation.' Thus the lines would refer to what happens in 690-733, and 672-689 would have to be considered as merely recounting the action of which we must be informed if we are to understand the subsequent matter, which is to be the central theme of the section. Judging from the portions of the two temptations which are extant, the account of the temptation in toto was not intended to be of equal length with that which follows, of the sentencing of Satan, and of his serving the sentence pronounced. Hence such an interpretation as that proposed above would not be inappropriate. The usual method of dealing with the passage is illustrated in Grein's translation: 'Da fiels dem Unhold ein, der einst geworfen aus den Himmeln ward, dass er zur Hölle tauchte, dass er den Wart aller Wesen wollte da versuchen, brachte ihm, etc.'

669b-670a. Cf. 181ᵃ: āworpen of worulde.

670b. Cf. 30; Gu. 555.

671b. Cf. 616ᵃ.

672 ff. The poet follows the order of Matthew (4. 1-11), the second temptation being either omitted or lost in course of transmission, almost certainly the latter.

672a. Cf. 153, 357.

672b. The qualification of stānas by brāde here was probably inspired by the fact that this adjective was used in a technical sense with hlāf, to signify paximatium (the overdone bread which served as part of the provisions on sea-voyages and military campaigns). Hence Satan is said to bring Christ broad, flat stones shaped like bread.

673a. for hungre. Kennedy: 'to stay his hunger;' cf. Heliand 1067: 'gehēli thīnan hungar.'

674. Cf. Heliand 1065 in exactly the same context: 'ef thu giuualid habes.' This corresponds, of course, to the Scriptural 'si Filius Dei es.'

675 = 690. So also An. 202, 343, 510 (him þā . . .).

676b. Cf. 'scriptum est,' Mt. 4. 4, etc.

677. Grein thought this fragment belonged to the answer to the first temptation. If so, the poet took as great liberties in his treatment of this answer as in that to the third. The phrase would fit more naturally into the third itself, as a rendering in the first person of the Lat. illi soli servies (v. 10), which may have been expanded by the poet so as to include allusion to the First Commandment: 'Non habebis deos alienos coram me.' Bouterwek is evidently thinking of this when he translates: '[Du sollst Niemand anbeten] ohne mich allein.'

678-680. As Kühn suspected (Über die Angelsächsischen Gedichte von Christ und Satan, p. 15), these lines are misplaced. They are clearly in the tone of the hymns of praise to the Saviour which occur in both of the earlier sections of Sat., and would fit especially well (if ac be changed to and) after line 660. We may assume that the scribe in his effort to conserve time and space, which an examination of this page of the MS. discovers, omitted them, and inserted them later at a point where it is very likely that there was a gap in his copy.

678b. So Chr. 420, 513.

679b. bûtan ende. So 379ᵃ.

680a. We may proceed on Graz's suggestion that the second hemistich of this line contained an object of genôm. Not that such an object is absolutely necessary, however, because the Drihten Hælend of 683 is near enough so that there can be no misunderstanding. Graz's emendation, hâlig Scyppend, is impossible, since grammar would require hâligne, which would give us an expanded E-verse. For hæleða Scyppend, cf. Hymn 34 and gâsta Scyppend, Sat. 244.

Cf. mid hondum Hælend genôm, 544.

681. See Sievers, Gram. 221. 2, on the ecthlipsis of h (esle).

682a. Cf. blâc bealowes gâst, 721.

683a. E. Meyer (p. 24) considers on dâne equivalent to an adv. = 'nieder'; but it is surely only a parallel to on beorh.

683b. So 219ᵃ, 576ᵃ.

684. Such a form as -bêwende could hardly be an error. It is probably a spelling analogous to getrêweð < getrêoweð, parallel to getrûweð (see Sievers, Gram. 156. 5).

685b. Manning (Supplement to Lye's Dictionarium) cleared the way for an understanding of the MS. reading, þines seoferdum, by suggesting that it is a mistake for þines seolfes dôm, 'in tui ipsius potestatem.' Grein completed the emendation by prefixing on, so that the phrase becomes similar to Beow. 2147ᵇ, Gu. 678ᵃ, Minds of Men 64ᵇ, and By. 38ᵇ.

688b-689. 'If thou wilt be truly king of angels and men, as thou didst intend (or hast purposed).' The devil implies that Christ's ideas about his kingship will remain only ideas unless he accepts power from the Prince of Evil. This clause need not be interpreted (with Groschopp, p. 255) as rendering the 'si Filius Dei es' of the original, and hence as belonging to the missing temptation. Satan is merely putting into words the thoughts which he believes have been in Christ's mind.

riht Cyning. Cf. 260ᴬ; Gu. 654; An. 120, 324, 700.

691 ff. The violence of the answer which Christ is here represented as making to Satan forms a striking contrast to the simplicity of the Gospel story. Gregory, indeed, holds up the Saviour's mildness as a model for all men to follow when under temptation. He says: 'Ecce adversitatem diaboli Dominus pertulit, et nihil ei nisi mansuetudinis verba respondit' (Hom. in Evang. 16: Patr. Lat. 76. 1136). The only treatment of the temptation theme I was able to find which contained even a slight hint of the vivid passage in Sat. is in the Blickling homily for the First Sunday in Lent (31. 12). Christ's reply there is as follows: 'Gā þū on bæcling, and gemyne þē sylfne hū mycel yfel þē gelamp for þīnre gītsunga and oforhȳdo, and for þīnum īdlan gilpe; and forþon ic þē ne fylge, forþon on þyssum þrim þū eart oforswīþed.' But later on the same homilist also follows Gregory in lauding the Lord's patience and meekness.

691. Cf. 628.

692a. Thus, in Mt. 4. 10, Christ signifies his recognition of the identity of the tempter ('Vade, Satana'), who is first described simply as 'tentator.'

692b-693. Compare the phrasing in 27-30, 41-3, 449-450. For a similar use of weotod, cf. An. 889, 951, 1365-6; Rid. 16. 6, 11.

693a. Cf. 287; Dom. 91, gearwað tōgēanes; Sat. 711. The Corrector gives the normal inflection, gearo. See Sievers, Gram. 300.

695 ff. Compare Satan's return to his 'crew' in Paradise Regained 4. 576-580:

> So strook with dread and anguish fell the Fiend,
> And to his crew, that sat consulting, brought > Joyless triumphals of his hop't success, > Ruin, and desperation, and dismay,
> Who durst so proudly tempt the Son of God.

696b. sorga mǣste. Cf. Chr. 1082b, 1209a; Gen. B 364b.

700. Dietrich would relate the MS. reading, helheoðo, and the heoðe in the MS. of Beow. 404 to κύτος, which signifies various wide spaces, e. g., the hold of a ship, the cavity of the body, and the vault of heaven in κύτταρος. He translates it 'umbraculum' or 'höllengewölbe.' Scholars have tended on the whole to reject this explanation. Grein proposed hel heorodrēorig ('traurige' in the translation). Rendered by 'mournful,' 'sad,' as in Ph. 217, this reading offers the most satisfactory way out of the difficulty. Cosijn's heaðodrēorig seems possible, but is unsupported. Could we retain the compound substantive of the MS., interpreted as an error for helhleoðo, 'slopes' or 'promontories of hell'? (Cf. Gen. B 764, sēcan helle gehliðo.) Drēorig would then have to be construed as an uninflected adj. in the post-positive position.

700b. Cf. 706b.

704. Cosijn's transposition of sēo neatly mends the rhythm. Sēo is dissyllabic.

Compare the swartan mistas of Gen. B 391. According to 2 Pet. 2. 17, the mist of darkness ('caligo tenebrarum') is reserved for the wicked.

705. Cf. Vercelli homily 21 (fol. 114ᵇ): 'Hie wiston þe geornor, witum besëne on þære byrnendan helle, wið hwæne hie winnan ongunnon.' For 705ᵃ, cf. An. 932ᵇ; El. 945ᵇ; Beow. 821ᵇ; for 705ᵇ, Gen. A 77; Gen. B 346; Beow. 113; Ex. 514; Chr. 1527.

707-708. The metre of the MS. reading could be improved by the simple expedient of transposing sêo, so that it would come after, instead of before, grim græfhûs; but 708ᵃ would then be an irregular E-verse. Indeed, it is practically impossible to restore the abnormal lines between this point and the end of the poem without creating at least one new difficulty for every old one which is removed. The clauses are fairly well connected and intelligible as far as the thought is concerned, but one cannot hope to construct perfect OE. verses out of them, at least not with any pretence of restoring the original. I think it quite probable that the MS. preserves for us just about what the poet wrote, and that we should not blame the scribe for the poor versification. These remaining lines are more like a rough draft, never worked up into final form, than a jumbled copy of finished work. At any rate, I have in general printed them almost as they stand in the MS., and shall merely try to interpret their contents. The attempts at reconstruction which various scholars have made are interesting, and sometimes suggestive. They will be found in the variants.

Sievers' emendation, grimme, is not quite satisfactory, because it would add another instance to the already long list of weak adjectives modifying substantives, without an accompanying article.

Tô is an adv., and 708ᵇ connects well with the two following lines; so no gap should be assumed.

709a. The on of seondon is clearly added by the Corrector, but we may admit it, to obtain a normal hemistich.

Kock's interpretation (Jub. Jaunts, p. 14) of tîda as 'seasons,' 'years,' is unnecessary. I see nothing preposterous in a spirit, who could post as swift as thought, being 'supposed to measure hell wîd and sîd in two hours.' Christ uses the adv. ricene, and the whole tone of his command implies the greatest speed. Moreover, in the sequel these points are to be noted: in 713-5 we learn that Satan 'now measured with his hands his woes and torments'; in 721, in compliance with Christ's words in 701ᵃ and 703ᵇ, he has reached hell's bottom. Thence it seemed to him that it was a hundred thousand miles to hell's doors. The poet then continues, 'thus (or as?) the Mighty One had commanded that he measure his torment,' and one may infer that Satan's calculations are approximately completed. Yet there is not the slightest hint that two years have elapsed. Poetical condensation might account for the omission of notice that two hours had passed meanwhile, but hardly for silence regarding the passing of two years.

Moreover, for the poet to represent the Prince of Evil as forced to go over hell, measuring it span by span would be to introduce a ludicrous picture; and if one is inclined to be literal, one might think it rather doubtful whether Satan could have covered the hundred thousand miles to hell's doors alone in two years.

710. There are no traces discoverable of a verb mercian or myrcian from myrce, 'dark,' 'murky.' In spite of the fact that in Dom. 26 hell is called þā mircan gesceaft, it is preferable to derive merced from mercian (mearcian) 'mark,' 'design,' 'appoint.' Cf. gemercade=designavit, Lk. 10. 1 (Lind.). Bouterwek construes it as syntactically parallel to āmeten (in translating it 'berechnet'), but this is a doubtful construction.

Stoddard (Anglia 10. 162-3) thinks it possible that a folio is missing between 710 and 711, but if such is the case, judging from the context, it is extremely doubtful whether the leaf contained any writing.

711. For fem. nom. wrece, see Sievers, Gram. 253, n. 2.

712b. Cf. Chr. 1526: sceolon raþe feallan on grimne grund.

713. Ǣglēce is an Anglian nom., and need not be emended. Holthausen's earmum gives a line grotesque both in form and content.

715a. wēan and wītu. Cf. 185, 336.

715b. Cf. wonna lēg, Bēow. 3115.

716. lǣhte. Cf. the lācende lēg of Dan. 476; Chr. 1595; El. 580.

718a. hē. Nom. plur.

718b. So 390ᵇ.

719. There is apparently a gap after this line. Godes andsacan may, as Holthausen concludes, be the last two words of the sentence which is broken by the gap, but it is unsafe to make final deductions from the metre in this passage.

721a. Cf. 682ᵃ.

721b. According to Gregory, Moral. 26. 37, 'infernus vero recte fundum non habere creditur.'

723a. helle duru. Cf. 98, 380, 467.

723b. se Mihtiga. Cf. Gen. B 299; Ex. 484.

725a. Grein's sinne for synne is very acceptable. It renders the hemistich a perfect parallel to 694ᵇ, where Christ issues his commands to Satan þurh þā hēhstan miht. The new scribe, who had taken up his task only at 711, probably did not understand the reference of sinne, and hence altered the i to y. If synne be retained, the phrase must mean 'by means of his sinful power'; it could hardly be equivalent to Kennedy's 'for his sin.'

726. Holthausen's gёnide restores the alliteration, and is a possible change. Cf. Gen. B 349: Sātān . . . sceolde gleman þæs grundes. However, gleman seems not to have been employed absolutely, in the sense of 'ponder,' 'meditate,' 'consider,' which the word must mean here, whereas gemunan is used thus several times.

727b. Cf. 26ᵇ, 73ᵇ, 129ᵃ.

728b. On egsan gryre, see note on 454ᵇ.

729. dēofla mænego. So 111ᵃ.

731. Cf. 80.

731b-732. Cf. An. 469: Ongan ðā reordigan.

wērigan gāstas. Cf. se wērega gāst, 126. The words on þa in the MS. of 731 may be taken as a repetition of the two syllables preceding; or should we read: ongunnon þā þā wērigan gāstas?

I print Grein's reconstruction of lines 729-732 consecutively, for reference. It is no improvement on the original, but is of some interest, being the only attempt which has been made to render the passage unobjectionable in both form and content:

> oð þæt egsan gryre > dēofla mænego [ādrēogan ne mihton] ;
> þonne ūp āstāg [carmra gedræg] > wordum in witum; ongunnon þā wērigan gāstas > reordian and cweðan [wið heora rices boran] :

This is translated in the Dichtungen:

> bis dass Angstgraus da > der Teufel Menge tief erfasste:
> dann stieg auf allda der Elenden Geheul > mit Worten in den Wehqualen; die verworfenen Geister > begannen zu reden und zu rufen zu ihres Reiches Fürsten > Da! nun sei im Uebel du! du wolltest eh nicht gut!

Grein's reading, besides being metrically incorrect, is not in perfect harmony with what would certainly have been the context if the end of the poem were more nearly complete. The poet is clearly reverting to the motive of Satan's being forced to endure the reproaches of his own followers. Hence Grein's interpretation of egsan gryre, and his phrase carmra gedræg, are rather out of place. Gedræg seems to mean 'sorrow,' 'lamentation,' and for this reason is not an appropriate word for a context in which reproaches and taunts are to be uttered.

The closing passage, though metrically impossible, makes fair sense: 'The perfidious and loathsome wight gazed through that wretched den until the dreadful multitude of devils arose: those malign spirits in their torments began to speak words and to say, "Oh! thus be thou in misery now henceforth: thou didst never desire that which was good."' Cf. the devils' reproaches in 53-64.

  Egsan gryre I take to mean not the terror which the fiends are suffering, but the terror which they inspire.

  Finit Liber II. Amen.—a tantalizing rubric. What was Liber I?
Junius (p. 91) explains the matter thus: 'Sequentia vero a pagina 213 usque ad finem . . . videntur . . . adjecta ab aliquo, qui (quemadmodum ex fine libri colligitur) hunc veluti librum Secundum prioribus putavit adjiciendum.' This would seem to be the correct explanation.
Otherwise we should have to accept the improbable hypothesis that Christ and Satan is only a fragment or fragments of a long poem.

ADDITIONS TO VARIANTS

  The following readings from Grein's 'Nachträgliche Verbesser-ungen' (Bibl. 2. 414) were omitted from the variants through oversight: 160 cwiðde, firena, herde (hirde) (?); 199 uppe (?); 376 into; 486 hige ofergymdon (?); 511 galgan; 634 nið deorsum (?).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. EDITIONS

(a) Complete:

FRANCIS JUNIUS, Cædmonis Monachi Paraphrasis Poetica Genesios ac præcipuarum Sacræ paginæ Historiarum, abhinc annos MLXX, Anglo-Saxonicè conscripta, et nunc primùm edita. . . . Amstelodami. . . . Typis et sumptibus Editoris. MDCLV.

BENJAMIN THORPE, Cædmon's Metrical Paraphrase of parts of the Holy Scriptures in Anglo-Saxon. London, 1832.

KARL W. BOUTERWEK, Cædmon's des Angelsachsen Biblische Dichtungen. Elberfeld, 1848-1854.

CHRISTIAN W. M. GREIN, Bibliothek der Angelsächsischen Poesie. Göttingen, 1857. (Vol. 1.)

RICHARD P. WÜLKER, Bibliothek der Angelsächsischen Poesie. Leipzig, 1894. (Vol. 2.)

(b) Partial:

LUDWIG ETTMÜLLER, Engla and Seaxna Scopas and Boceras. Quedlinburg and Leipzig, 1850. (Pp. 194 ff. contain 1-224, 366-513.)

MAX RIEGER, Alt- und Angelsächsisches Lesebuch. Giessen, 1861. (Pp. 115-6 contain 160-189.)

OWEN T. WILLIAMS, Short Extracts from Old English Poetry. Bangor [Wales], 1909. (Pp. 23-9 contain 75-125, 19-64, 385-436, 680A-725.)

FREDERICK KLAEBER, The Later Genesis and other Old English and Old Saxon Texts relating to the Fall of Man. Heidelberg, 1913. (Pp. 34-5 contain 410-421, 470-494.)

II. TRANSLATIONS

THORPE, as above.

BOUTERWEK, as above.

CHRISTIAN W. M. GREIN, Dichtungen der Angelsachsen stabreimend übersetzt. Göttingen, 1857. (Vol. 1.)

CHARLES W. KENNEDY, The Cædmon Poems, translated into English Prose. London and New York, 1916.

III. TEXTUAL STUDIES

Franz Dietrich, 'Zu Cädmon' (Zeitschrift für Deutsches Altertum 10. 310-311, 361-7).

Christian W. M. Grein, 'Zur Textkritik der Angelsächsischen Dichter' (Germania 10. 419-420).

Eduard Sievers, 'Collationen Angelsächsischer Gedichte' (Zeitschrift für Deutsches Altertum 15. 459-461, 456-7).

————. 'Zur Rhythmik des Germanischen Alliterationsverses' (Beiträge zur Geschichte der Deutschen Sprache und Literatur 10. 209-314; 12. 451-544).

Ferdinand Holthausen, 'Beiträge zur Erklärung und Textkritik Altenglischer Dichter' (Indogermanische Forschungen 4. 385 ff.).

————. Review of Wülker's text (Anglia Beiblatt 5. 232-4).

Friedrich Graz, Die Metrik der sogenannten Cädmonschen Dichtungen, mit Berücksichtigung der Verfasserfrage. Weimar, 1894. (Pp. 57-73.)

————. 'Beiträge zur Textkritik der sogenannten Cädmon'schen Dichtungen' (Englische Studien 21. 13-27).

Peter J. Cosijn, 'Anglosaxonica III' (Beiträge zur Geschichte der Deutschen Sprache und Literatur 21. 21-5).

James W. Bright, 'Jottings on the Cædmonian Christ and Satan' (Modern Language Notes 18. 129-131).

Ernst A. Kock, 'Interpretations and Emendations of Early English Texts' (Anglia 27. 229).

————, Jubilee Jaunts and Jottings. Leipzig, 1918. (Lunds Universitets Arsskrift.)

IV. CRITICISM, INTERPRETATION, SYNTAX, SOURCES, ETC.

George Hickes, Thesaurus Linguarum Vett. Septentrionalium. Oxford, 1705. (1. 133.)

Richard P. Wülker, Das Evangelium Nicodemi in der Abendländischen Literatur. Paderborn, 1872.

Frederik Hammerich, Älteste Christliche Epik der Angelsachsen, Deutschen, und Nordländer. (Translation by Michelsen. Gütersloh, 1874. Pp. 64-9.)

Robert S. Watson, Cædmon, the First English Poet. London, 1875. (Pp. 80-6.)

Bernhard Ten Brink, Geschichte der Englischen Litteratur. Berlin, 1877. (English translation: Early English Literature. London and New York, 1883; 1. 86-8, 375-6.)

HUGO BALG, Der Dichter Cædmon und seine Werke. Bonn, 1882.

FRIEDRICH GROSCHOPP, Das Angelsächsische Gedicht 'Crist und Satan.' Halle, 1883. (Also in Anglia 6. 248-276.)

ALBIN KÜHN, Über die Angelsächsischen Gedichte von Christ und Satan. Halle, 1883.

HEINRICH ZIEGLER, Der Poetische Sprachgebrauch in den sogenannten Cædmonschen Dichtungen. Münster, 1883.

OSCAR HOFER, Der Syntaktische Gebrauch des Dativs und Instrumentals in den Cædmon beigelegten Dichtungen. Halle, 1884.

EDUARD SIEVERS, 'Zu Codex Junius XI' (Beiträge zur Geschichte der Deutschen Sprache und Literatur 10. 195-9).

RICHARD P. WÜLKER, Grundriss zur Geschichte der Angelsächsischen Litteratur. Leipzig, 1885. (Pp. 111-146.)

ADOLF EBERT, Allgemeine Geschichte der Literatur des Mittelalters im Abendlande. Leipzig, 1887. (3. 255-6.)

HENRY MORLEY, English Writers. London, 1888. (2. 95.)

ROBERT W. DEERING, The Anglosaxon Poets on the Judgment Day. Halle, 1890.

HEINRICH UNGEMACH, Die Quellen der Fünf Ersten Chester Plays. Erlangen and Leipzig, 1890.

CHARLES J. ABBEY, Religious Thought in Old English Verse. London, 1892.

STOPFORD A. BROOKE, History of Early English Literature. London, 1892. (Pp. 325-331.)

ERNEST J. BECKER, A Contribution to the Comparative Study of the Mediæval Visions of Heaven and Hell. Baltimore, 1899.

ADRIAAN J. BARNOUW, Textkritische Untersuchungen nach dem Gebrauch des Bestimmten Artikels und des Schwachen Adjectivs in der Altenglischen Poesie. Leiden, 1902. (Pp. 101-8, 230.)

ROBERT T. GASKIN, Cædmon, the First English Poet. 3d ed. London, 1902.

CHARLES D. A. F. ABBETMEYER, Old English Poetical Motives derived from the Doctrine of Sin. Minneapolis, 1903.

OTTO GRÜTERS, Über einige Beziehungen zwischen Altsächsischer und Altenglischer Dichtung. Bonner Beiträge zur Anglistik 17. 1-50. 1905.

FRANCIS A. BLACKBURN, Exodus and Daniel. Boston, 1907. (Introduction.)

HEINRICH E. W. MEYER, Darstellung der Syntaktischen Erscheinungen in dem Angelsächsischen Gedicht 'Christ und Satan.' Rostock, 1907.

M. BENTINCK SMITH, in The Cambridge History of English Literature. London and New York, 1907. (1. 53-4.)

JOHANNES O. L. WALTER, Der Syntaktische Gebrauch des Verbums in dem Angelsächsischen Gedichte 'Christ und Satan.' Rostock, 1907.

RICHARD P. WÜLKER, Geschichte der Englischen Litteratur. Leipzig, 1896. (2d ed., 1907; I. 59, 61-3.)

MAX FÖRSTER, 'Altenglische Predigtquellen' (Archiv für das Studium der Neueren Sprachen 116. 301 ff.).

ALOIS BRANDL, Englische Literatur. 1908. (In Paul's Grundriss der Germanischen Philologie, 2d ed., 2. 1045-6.)

GUSTAV GRAU, Quellen und Verwandtschaften der Älteren Germanischen Darstellungen des Jüngsten Gerichtes. Halle, 1908.

CARL RICHTER, Chronologische Studien zur Angelsächsischen Literatur. Halle, 1910.

STEPHANIE VON GAJŠEK, Caedmon und Milton. Vienna, 1911.

THEODOR FRINGS, 'Christ und Satan' (Zeitschrift für Deutsche Philologie 45. 216-237).

REINHOLD WIENERS, Zur Metrik des Codex Junius XI. Bonn, 1913.

ADRIAAN J. BARNOUW, Anglo-Saxon Christian Poetry (translation by Louise Dudley). The Hague, 1914. (Pp. 24-6.)

GLOSSARY

The diphthong æ follows ad; ð and þ follow t. Roman numerals indicate the classes of ablaut verbs; WI., etc., those of weak verbs; red., the reduplicating verbs; prp., the preteritive presents; anv., the anomalous verbs. When the indication of mood and tense is omitted, supply 'ind. pres.' (unless some other designation has just preceded); when of mood only, supply 'ind.' When no form is printed before a reference, supply the head-word. The asterisk distinguishes words found only in Christ and Satan, according to the Grein-Köhler Sprachschatz.

The glossary is intended to contain references to all the forms in the text.

A.

ā, adv., ever, for ever, always: 315, 362, 398, 619. See āwa.

ābelgan, III, anger, offend, provoke: pret. 1s. ābealh, 410; opt. 3s. ābelige, 195.

ābēodan, II, offer, announce: opt. 2s. ābēode, 695.

Abraham, pr. n.: gs. Abrahames, 461.

æ, see āh.

ād, m., flame, fire: as. 331.

Ādām, pr. n.: ns. 411; gs. Ādāmes, 408; as. Ādām, 20, 473.

ādrēogan, II, bear, suffer, endure: inf. 638.

ādrīfan, I, drive, espel: pret. 3s. ādrāf, 201; inf. 174, 187, 257.

ādwǣscan, WI., estinguish, quench: inf. 306.

āfre, adv., ever, for ever, always: 116, 142, 231, 277, 304, 390, 413, 597, 635; in a negative clause: 50, 140, 171, 267, 451.

after, prep., w. dat., after: 26, 630.

æghwā, pron., every one: da. æghwǣm, 363.

æghwǣr, adv., everywhere, in every respect: 342, 479.

æghwylc, pron., each, every (one or thing): subst. w. gen., ns. 194; gs. æghwylces, 273; absol., dsm. æghwylcum, 265.

æglǣca, m., wretch, demon, fiend: ns. 161, 579; āglǣca, 448; æglǣce, 713; np. ēglēcan, 73.

æht, f., possession, heritage, power: ds. æhte, 87, 117, 254, 279, 454.

ǣlan, see onǣlan.

ælmihtig, adj., almighty: nsm. 599; nsm. wk. ælmihtiga, 268.

ǣne, adv., once: 410.

ǣnig, pron., any: dsf. ǣnigum, 146.

æpl, m., apple: gs. eaples, 411; ap. æpla, 483.

ǣr, adv., before, formerly, previously, erewhile, earlier, beforehand: 74, 117, 123, 255, 279, 290, 303, 366, 383, 390, 525, 689, 733; w. verbs in pret. expressing a pluperf. sense: 246, 494, 575, 669; early, 515; comp. ǣrror, 151, 299; sup. ǣrest, first: 20, 323, 473, 703.

ǽr, prep., w. dat., before, ere: 466.

ǽr, conj., before, ere: 409, 503, 544, 560, 709.

æt, prep., w. dat., at, by, before, to: 98, 338, 538, 663.

ætsomne, adv., together, at once: 41, 127, 526.

æðele, adj., noble, excellent, glorious: dsm. wk. æþelan, 239; asn. 20, 473; npm. æðele, 46 (here equivalent to righteous).

áfirran, WI., remove, put away, expel: pret. 3s. áfirde, 67; áfyrde, 479; opt. 3s. áfirre, 284.

áfyllan, WI., fill: pp. áfylled, 100.

áfyrhtan, WI., frighten, terrify: pp. npm. áfyrhte, 385.

ágan, prp., have, possess, own, get possession of, obtain: 3s. áh, 118; 3p. ágon, 361; pret. 1s. áhte, 107; 2s. áhtest, 55, 59; opt. pret. 1p. áhton, 414; inf. 86, 96, 122, 174, 176, 253, 314, 370, 506, 554; tó ágan, 147. Negative: nágan: 1p. 101.

ágangan, red., go by, pass: pp. ágangen, 501; npf. ágongene, 709.

ágen, adj., own: nsn. 10.

agēn, adv., again, anew: 76.

ágend, m., possessor, Lord: ns. 678.

ágēotan, II, pour out, shed: pret. 3s. ágēat, 549.

ah, conj., but: 268, 292, 347, 450, 520, 636, 694, 696; ac: 30, 112, 125, 626, 678; almost = and: ah, 331.

áhebban, VI, raise, lift: 3s. áhefeð, 311; pret. 3s. áhóf, 681.

álǽdan, WI., lead, lead out: pp. álǽded, 178.

ald, adj., old, ancient: nsm. wk. alda, 34.

aldor, n., age, life (á tó aldre, for ever): ds. aldre, 315, 362, 619.

aldor, m., chief, prince: ns. 76, 323, 664; ealdor, 373, 567.

aldorðegn, m., chief, prince: as. 66.

álǽfan, WI., grant: inf. 116, 278.

all, see eall.

alwihte, fp., all creatures, all created things: gp. alwihta, 616, 671, 697.

ámetan, V, measure: opt. 3s. ámǽte, 725; imp. 2s. ámet, 700, 703; pp. ámeten, 710; asn. ámetene, 706.

an (= on), adv., to: 66.

án, num., one, a certain, alone, only: nsm. 26; dsm. ánum, 55; asm. ænne, 677; gpm. ánra (w. gehwylc = every one, all), 432; dpf. ánum, 147; wk. nsm. ána, 32, 249, 260A, 584.

and, and: 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, 11, 15, 16, 17, 19, 20, 32, 42, 48(2), 49, 52, 56, 60, 79, 83, 87, 89, 105, 12, 13, 19, 20, 32, 52, 74, 75, 85(2), 92, 207(2), 9, 14, 20, 21, 23, 26, 35, 39, 42, 43, 46, 48, 49, 71, 75, 89, 91, 98, 303, 21, 25, 32, 33, 34(2), 35, 36(2), 37(2), 40, 42, 48, 60, 65, 76, 77, 81, 98, 408, 20, 25, 26, 32, 45, 48, 54, 55, 58, 68, 73, 77, 83, 96, 97, 99, 503, 7, 12, 21, 23, 25, 33(2), 49, 52, 55, 56, 66, 82, 85, 600, 6, 9, 10, 15, 32, 34, 37(2), 38, 41, 52, 53, 56, 59, 81, 82, 86, 87, 89, 99, 700, 3, 4, 7, 12, 15, 32. And in the MS. always occurs as ⁊ I expand this sign and, because, in general, spellings in an, am outnumber those in on, om. However, ond would correspond more exactly with the phonology of the Anglian original.

andfeng, m., reception, receiver, or, possibly, defense, guardian: ns. 245.

andleofan, num., eleven: 522.

andsaca, m., adversary, enemy: ns. 191, 280; np. andsacan, 340, 719; ap. andsacan, 269.

andswarian, W2, answer, reply: pret. 3s. andswarode, 675, 690; 3p. answeradan, 51.

andwlita, m., countenance: as. andwlitan, 378.

anforlætan, red., abandon, forsake: pp. ânforlæten, 228.

anmēdla, see on—.

anwalda, m., ruler, sovereign: asm. anwaldan, 209, 642.

apostol, m., apostle: ap. apostolas, 571.

ar, f., favor, mercy: gp. âra, 209.

ariman, W1., count: inf. 11.

arisan, I, arise, rise, start up: 3p. ârîsað, 605; pret. 3s. ârâs, 238, 240, 432, 516.

ascēadan, red., separate, exclude, cut off: pp. âscēaden, 177.

asecgan, W3., declare, express: inf. 351.

†asellan, W1., expel: pp. âseald, 89.

asettan, W1., set, set down, plant: 3p. âsettað, 639; pret. 1s. âsette, 481; 3s. 683.

astigan, I, arise, ascend, mount; descend: pret. 3s. âstâh, 549, 563, 682; âstâg, 717, 730; imp. 2p. âstîgað, 628.

atol, adj., dire, fierce, horrible, loathsome (as subst. equivalent to devil, fiend): nsm. 161, 681, 728; wk. atola, 96, 413, 487; nsf. atol, 61; gsm. wk. atolan, 327; dsm. wk. 108; asm. wk. 718; asn.

wk. atole, 26, 73, 129; npm. atole, 51; wk. atolan, 448; dpm. wk. 383.

atol, n., terror, horror: as. 395, 454; is. atole, 137.

āttor, n., poison: ds. ättre, 163; is. 40, 129, 318; ätre, 79.

āwa, adv., for ever: 315.

āweorpan, III, cast out, expel: pp. âworpen, 181, 669.

āwritan, I, write: pp. âwriten, 676.

āwyrged, adj., accursed: nsm. wk. âwyrgda, 316; gsm. wk. âwærgdan, 416; vsm. âwyrgda, 676, 691, 699; vpm. âwyrgde, 628.

B.

bæc, n., back: ds. bæce, 158.

bæcling, only in the adverbial phrase, on ~, back, backwards, behind: 698.

bættra, see gōd.

bæð, n., bath: np. bæðe, 546.

balu, adj., baleful, wicked, pernicious: nsm. wk. balewa, 484; apm. balewe, 488.

bān, n., bone: np. 468.

be, prep., w. dat. and instr., by, with: 268, 545.

bealo, n., bale, woe, evil: ga. bealowes, 682, 721; as. 71; ap. beala, 274.

bēam, m., tree, cross: ds. bēame, 510, 549.

bearm, m., lap, possession: ds. bearme, 153, 357, 672.

bearn, n., child, son: ns. 10, 587, 622; as. 86, 195, 577; np. 144, 153; gp. bearna, 475; dp. bearnum, 400, 582. See frēo-, frum-bearn.

bebycgan, W1., sell: pret. 3s. bebohte, 577.

becuman, IV, come, arrive, come upon, attain to, obtain: pret. 1s. becôm, 512; becwôm, 179; 3s. becôm, 245, 379, 387, 406, 466.

bedǽlan, W1., deprive, free: pret. 3s. bedǽlde, 68; pp. bedǽled, 186; bedǽled, 122; npm. bedǽlde, 344; npf. 296.

bedrîfan, I, drive, force: pret. 3s. bedrâf, 192.

befæðman, W1., embrace: 3s. befæðmeð, 310, 359; inf. 289.

beforan, adv., before, present before: 487.

beforan, prep., w. dat., before: 389.

bêgan, W1., bend, bend down: pret. 3s. bêgde, 381. See for-, gebêgan.

bêgen, num., both: d. bâm, 488.

begitan, V, beget, bring forth: pret. 3p. begêton; 474.

*begrêosan, II, render fearful, horrify: pp. npm. begrorene, 52.

behôfian, W2, need: 3s. behôfað, 210.

belgan, see âbelgan.

bême, f., trumpet: gs. bêman, 172, 238; ap. bêman, 602.

benǽman, W1., deprive: inf. 346; pp. benêmed, 121.

bend, m., bond, fetter: as. 539; dp. bendum, 49, 414.

bêodan, see âbêodan.

beofian, W2, tremble: pres. p, beofigende, 622.

beoran, IV, bear: opt. 1p. beoran, 206; pret. 3p. bêron, 483; inf. 158. See lêohtberende.

beorh, m., mountain: as. 682.

beorht, adj., bright, splendid, glorious, beautiful, clear: nsm. byrhtne, 363; asf. wk. beorhtan, 139; npm. beorhte, 295; apf. beorhte, 418; wk. beorhtan, 484; sup. gsf. wk. byrhtestan, 172. See eall-, beorht.

beorhte, adv., brightly: 215 (? adj. npm.), 295.

beorn, m., soldier: np. beornas, 51a.

beornan, III, burn: 3s. beorneð, 414; pres. p. beornende, 71, 158.

beran, see beoran.

bescyrian, W1., deprive, separate from: pp. npm. bescyrede, 343.

beteldan, III, cover, surround, enfold: pp. as adj. betolden, 588.

bewindan, III, surround, encircle: pp. bewunden, 650.

bîdan, I, abide, dwell, endure: inf. 27, 49. See gebîdan.

biddan, V, ask, pray for, bid: pret. 3s. bæd, 438, 673; inf. 209.

bilewit, adj., mild, gentle, guileless: asm. bilewitne, 242.

bindan, see gebindan.

biter, adj., bitter, dire: dsm. wk. bitran, 274; asm. wk. biteran, 149.

bitere, adv., bitterly, cruelly: 418.

bitung, see gristbitunge.

blâc, adj., black (? pale, wan, livid): nsm. blâc, 721; npm. blâce, 71; wk. hlâcan, 196.

blǽd, m., prosperity, reward, blessedness, joy, honor: ns. 363; blǽd, 593; as. blǽd, 42, 414, 508; blǽd, 527, 646.

blǽd, f., fruit: ap. blǽda, 418, 484 blâwan, red., blow, sound: inf. 602

blêtsian, see geblêtsian.

blis, f., bliss, exultation, joy: ns. 381.

blîðe, adj., blithe, happy, glad; gentle, kind: npm. 613; apm. 206.

blôd, n., blood: as. 549.

blondan, see geblondan.

blōstma, m., flower, blossom: gs. blōstman, 357.

bold, n., dwelling, home, mansion, palace: ds. bolde, 149; gp. bolda, 139; ap. bold, 687.

bona, see sūalbona.

-bora, see rǣdbora.

botm, m., bottom: ds. botme, 721.

brād, adj., broad, spacious, flat: nsn. wk. brāde, 215; apm. brāde, 672.

brecan, IV, break, burst through: pret. 3s. bræc, 381. See forbrecan.

brēost, n., breast: dp. brēostum, 206.

*breoton, adj., spacious: apn. breotone, 687.

bringan, W1., bring, lead, carry, proffer: 3p. bringað, 357; pret. 3s. brōhte, 672; 1p. brōhton, 153; inf. 149, 561.

brūcan, II, possess, enjoy: inf. 138.

bryne, m., burning: ds. 274.

brynewelm, m., burning heat or surge: is. brynewelme, 27.

brytta, m., lord: ns. 124; np. brytan, 23.

būend, see eorðbūende, londbēwende.

burh, f., city, citadel: ds. byrig, 624; as. burh, 459, 613, 687; gp. burga, 86, 139, 602; dp. burgum, 215. See sceldburg.

burhlēod, m., citizen (of the heavenly city): gp. burhlēoda, 561.

burhstyde, m., city, citadel: as. 363.

burhweall, m., city-wall: ap. burhweallas, 295.

būtan, prep., w. dat., without: 147, 679; būton, 315, 379.

būton, conj., except, save: 391.

bycgan, see bebycgan.

byrht, see beorht.

*byrhtword, adj., clear-voiced, eloquent: nsm. 238 [?].

bȳsen, f., example (warning): ds. bȳsne, 196.

C.

cald, adj., cold: asm. wk. caldan, 637.

carcern, n., prison: gs. carcernes, 490; as. 637.

ceald, n., cold: ns. 132.

cearig, adj., sorrowful: dp. cearium, 67. See sorghceari.

cēosan, II, choose: opt. 1p. cēosan, 203.

cerr, see edcerr.

cerran, W1., turn, direct one's course: imp. 2s. cer, 698; inf. 217.

cester, f., city: ds. cestre, 258, 657; as. cestre, 298.

clǣne, see unclǣne.

clēne, adv., wholly, entirely, altogether: 7, 18.

cleopian, W2., cry: 3s. cleopað, 34. 616.

clom, m., bond, chain, bondage: ns. (? n.) 103; as. 452, 490, 637; as. 157; ap. clomma, 444. See fȳrclom.

cnāwan, see oncnāwan.

costian, W2., tempt: pret. 3s. costode, 671.

cræft, m., power, might, cunning: as. 200, 392, 585, 725.

cræftig, adj., ingenious: nsm. 349.

Crīst, pr. n., Christ: ns. 67, 205, 570; ds. Crīste, 217, 596; as. 346.

-cuma, see wilcuma.

cuman, IV, come: 3s. cymeð, 607; 3p. cumað, 146, 301, 356; pret.

1s. cōm, 110; 3s. cōm, 36, 323, 393, 403, 426, 457, 564. See becuman.

cunnan, prp., know, have knowledge of, understand, be able, can: 1s. can, 250; con, 629; pret. 1s. cūðe, 142; opt. 2s. cunne, 702; 3s. cunne, 17.

cūð, adj., known, evident, sure, safe, known to be excellent: nsn. 258, 583; comp. nsn. cūðre, 596.

cwānian, W2, bewail, lament: pret. 3p. cwānedon, 320.

cwealm, m., death, torment, pain: as. 499.

cwēman, W1., please, serve: 3p. cwēmað 655; opt. 1p. cwēman, 596; inf. 184, 305.

cwēme, see gecwēme.

cweðan, V, say, speak: 3p. cweþað, 657; pret. 3s. cwæð, 229, 306, 409; inf. 732. See gecweðan.

cwide, m., phrase, words: dp. cwidum, 67. See sōð-, wom-, word-cwide.

cwīðan, W1., lament: pret. 3s. cwīðde, 160.

cyle, m., cold: as. 335.

cyn, n., race, people, kin, tribe, family, progeny: ns. cynn, 461; as. 20, 408; cynn, 134, 353. See encgel-, moncyn.

cynestōl, m., royal city or throne: as. 298.

cyning, m., king: ns. 260 A, 663, 688; cynincg, 616; ds. cyninge, 205; as. 258, 657, 671, 698; gp. cyninga, 205. See heofen-, wuldorcyning.

cyrr, m., occasion, time: ds. cyrre, 538.

cȳðan, W1., make known, proclaim: inf. cȳþan, 298. See gecȳðan.

D.

dǣd, f., deed: ns. 576; gp. dǣda, 623; ip. dǣdum, 156, 552. See inldǣd.

dæg, m., day: ns. 105; gs. dæges (adverbial, by day), 499; vs. 166; gp. daga, 12, 559, 606, 667; dp. dagum, 15. See dōmdæg, fyrndagas, gēardagas.

dægrēd, n., dawn, daybreak: ds. dægrēde, 466; as. 404.

dǣl, m., portion, region, quarter: ap. dǣles, 16.

dǣlan, W1., portion out, distribute: 3s. dǣleð, 581. See be-, gedǣlan.

dēad, adj., dead: npm. dēade, 605.

dēað, m., death: gs. dēaðes, 455, 499; ds. dēaðe, 516; as. 462, 665.

dēma, m., judge: ds. dēman, 380. See heofendēma.

dēman, W1., judge, adjudge, decree, proclaim, extol: opt. 1p. dēman, 299; inf. 109, 623.

dēofol, n., devil: gs. dēofles, 638; np. dēofla, 319; gp. dēofla, 111, 729.

dēop, adj., deep: nsf. dēop, 707; asm. dēopne, 7, 638; wk. dēopan, 30; asn. dēop, 344.

deorc, adj., dark, gloomy: asm. deorcne, 455; npm. deorce, 105.

dēore, adj., dear, beloved: nsm. 82; wk. dēora, 243, 543; dsm. wk. dēoran, 219, 257.

derne, see underne.

Didimus, pr. n.: ns. 543.

dim, adj., dim: dsm. wk. dimman, 111; asm. dimne, 455; wk. dimman, 337; npm. dimme, 105.

dine, see dyne.

dōgor, m., day: gp. dōgra, 243, 581.

dohtor, f., daughter: ds. dohtor, 439.

dōm, m., glory, majesty, praise, honor, dignity: as. 685; is. dōme, 537; ap. dōmas, 507, 555.

dōmdæg, m., doomsday, judgment-day: ds. dōmdæge, 600.

dōmlēas, adj., inglorious: asn. wk. dōmlēase, 232.

dōn, anv., do (in every case representing a preceding verb): pret. 3s. dyde, 117, 279, 525; 3p. dydon, 191, 625.

draca, m., dragon: np. dracan, 98; ap. dracan, 337.

drēam, m., joy, bliss, rapture; melody, music: ns. 79, 94; gs. drēames, 168, 174; drēamas, 182; as. 82, 122, 293, 314, 328, 354; vs. 166; gp. drēama, 314; ap. drēamas, 19, 44, 512, 680; ip. drēamum, 68, 344.

drēogan, II, do, perform, commit, practise, bear, suffer, endure: pret. 1p. drugon, 255; 3p. 74; inf. 185, 232. See ādrēogan.

drēorig, adj., mournful: nsm. wk. drēorga, 394. See heorodrēorig.

drīfan, see ā-, be-, in-, þorhdrīfan.

driht, f., multitude, throng, train: ds. 177.

drihten, m., lord: ns. 109, 219, 241, 261, 397, 404, 443, 452, 462, 516, 520, 530, 558, 581, 600, 627, 665, 675, 690; gs. drihtnes, 232, 507, 555, 605; drihtenes, 164; dryhtnes, 68; ds. drihtne, 156, 314, 394, 513, 552, 590; dryhtene, 44; dryhten, 82; as. drihten, 47, 174, 187, 198, 202, 222, 257, 576, 683; vs. drihten, 410, 439, 537. See frēodrihten.

dropa, m., drop: gp. dropena, 12.

dūfan, see gedūfan.

dugan, prp., be good or virtuous: pret. 3s. dēah, 283.

duguð, f., men, people, host; prosperity, glory, power: gs. duguðe, 507, 555; gp. duguða, 164; ap. duguðe, 19; ip. duguðum, 122.

dūn, f., mountain: as. dūne, 683.

duru, f., door, gate: ds. 98, 723; ap. 380, 467.

dūst, n., dust: ds. dūste, 605.

dwǣscan, see ādwǣscan.

dyne, m., din: ns. 380, 394, 404, 466; gp. dinna, 606.

E.

ēac, adv., also, furthermore: 699; ēc, 326.

ēadig, adj., happy, blessed, prosperous, rich: nsm. 304; gsm. wk. ēadigan, 660; asm. ēadigne, 293, 354; npm. ēadige, 647; wk. ēadigan, 356; npf. ēadige, 267, 653; npm. ēadige, 144; gpm. ēadigre, 221; apf. ēadige, 407.

ēage, n., eye: ip. ēagum, 140, 170, 390, 718; ēgum, 728.

ēalā, interj., O, alas: 164(2), 165(2), 166(2), 167(2), 168, 316.

eald, see ald.

eall, adj., all (often equivalent to everything or wholly: nsm. 137, 518; nsn. 226, 322, 465; gsn. ealles, 107, 168; alles, 55, 118, 182, 330; asm. alne, 8, 702; asf. ealle, 255; asn. eall, 87, 254; npm. ealle, 150, 154, 197, 385, 434, 532, 657; alle, 61; npn. ealle, 144; gpm. ealra, 205; gpf. ealra, 224, 442, 584; gpn. ealra, 664; alra, 60; dpm. eallum, 245, 249; apm.

ealle, 527, 616, 627; alle, 93; apf. alla, 203; apm. ealle, 127; eall, 393.

eallbeorht, adj., all-bright, most brilliant or splendid: apm. eallbeorhte, 522.

eapl, see æpl.

eard, m., land, country, home, fatherland: ds. earde, 93, 231, 458, 506; as. 116, 203; gp. earda, 113.

eardian, W2, dwell: 3s. eardað, 592; 3p. eardigað, 98.

ēare, n., ear: ip. ēarum, 171.

earfoðe, n., affliction, trouble: ap. earfoðo, 127.

earm, m., arm: as. 432.

earm, adj., miserable, wretched, wicked: nsm. 120, 448, 579, 713; wk. earme, 87; npm. earme, 73.

ēc, see ēac.

ēce, adj., eternal, everlasting: nsm. 18, 241, 261, 442, 443, 530, 558, 627, 675, 690; wk. ēca, 276, 458, 532; gsm. wk. ēcan, 168, 182; dsm. ēcan, 373; dsf. ēcan, 664; asm. ēcne, 118, 199, 203, 525, 642; wk. ēcan, 46, 378; asf. ēce, 619; vsm. 410; apm. 512.

ēce, adv., eternally, perpetually: 98.

edcerr, m., return: gs. edcerres, 451.

edwit, n., reproach, scorn, mockery: as. 639, 681.

Ēfe, prn., Eve: n. 408.

eft, adv., again, afterwards, hereafter: 21, 75, 212, 229, 374, 478, 512, 541.

ēge, see ēage.

egeslic, adj., terrible: nsm. 434.

egsa, m., terror (? torment): ns. 379, 393, 406; gs. egsan, 454, 728; is. egsan, 385; ap. egsan, 487.

*eisig, adj., terrible, dreadful: isf. eisegan, 36.

engelcyn, n., order of angels: ns. 366.

ende, m., end, period: ns. 40; ds. 315, 379, 679.

*enderim, n., number (? total): 12.

endestæf, m., end: as. 541.

engel, m., angel: ns. engel, 81; encgel, 586; np. englas, 60, 354; gp. engla, 21, 36, 95, 167, 199, 221, 239, 302, 388, 397, 403, 424, 491, 520, 535, 563, 568, 653, 659, 666, 689; dp. englum, 123, 142, 249, 288, 293, 330, 391, 591, 625; ap. englas, 522. See hēhengel.

eorl, m., man: np. eorlas, 478.

eorre, adj., nsm. 261, 429.

eorðbūende, mp., dwellers on, or inhabitants of, the earth: dp. eorðbūendum, 1.

eorðe, f., earth: gs. eorðan, 16, 56, 659; ds. eorðan, 146, 246, 290, 299, 303, 356, 496, 558, 597; eorþan, 267; as. eorðan, 5.

eal, f., shoulder: as. esle, 681.

etan, V, eat: pret. 2p. æton, 483; æten, 487.

ēðel, m., hereditary home, country, land: gs. ēðles, 327; ds. ēðle, 403, 461, 478, 496, 554; eðele, 108; as. ēðel, 117, 279.

ēðm, m., vapor: ns. 704.

F.

fācne, adj., wicked, factious: ip. fācnum, 65.

fæder, m., father: ns. 310, 359; gp. 308; fæderes, 580; ds. fæder, 318. See hēhfæder.

fægen, adj., glad, elated: npm. fægen, 435.

fæger, adj., fair, beautiful, sweet:
nsm. 79; nsm. 457, 547; asm.
fægerne, 329; comp. nsn. fægere, 389; asn. fægere, 213.

fægre, adv., beautifully, elegantly:
308.

fǣhðe, f., feud, hostility, enmity:
ns. 405; as. 641.

fǣmne, f., virgin: gs. fǣmnan, 495.

fæst, adj., fast, firmly fastened: ip.
fæstum, 39. See sóðfæst.

fæstan, W1., fast: pret. 3s. fæste, 667. See oðfæstan.

fæste, adv., fast, firmly: 324; feste, 58; feste, 104.

fæsten, n., prison, sepulchre; ds.
fæstenne, 521.

fæstlic, adj., firm, perpetual: nsm.
325.

fæstnian, see gefæstnian.

fæðman, see befæðman.

fáh, adj., guilty, hostile: nsm. 97, 128, 156, 186, 479; dsm. fágum, 110.

fáh, adj., stained, spotted: nsm. 180.

faran, VI, go, proceed, come: 3s.
færeð, 608; inf. 407, 443.

fatian, see gefatian.

-féa, see geféa.

feallan, red., fall, fall down: pret.
3p. féollon, 533, 546. See gefeallan.

fela, n. indecl., many, much: 402, 497; feola, 477; feolo, 421; adverbial: feola, 160.

félan, see gefélan.

feng, see andfeng.

feohtan, see oferfeohtan.

féond, m., fiend, devil: ns. 479; as.
225, 405, 463; npm. 104, 196;
féondas, 640; gp. féonda, 76; dp.
féondum, 445.

foor, adv., far away, distant: 40.

flówer, num., four: 603.

flówertig, num., forty: 475, 559, 667.

féran, W1., go, journey: 3s. féreð, 389; 3p. férað, 654; pret. 3s. férde, 495; inf. 110. See geféran.

ferian, see geferian.

ferð, see wideferð.

feste, see fæste.

féða, m., band, host, company: ns.
457; ds. féþan, 324; np. féðan, 221.

firen, f., sin, crime, iniquity, torment: as. firne, 641; gp. firna, 160; dp. firenum, 479; firnum, 435; fyrnum, 128.

firenfull, adj., sinful, wicked: npm.
firenfulle, 65.

firnian, W2., sin: pret. 3p. firnedon, 620.

firran, see áfirran.

fléman, see gefléman.

fléogan, II, fly: pret. 3s. fléah, 162;
inf. 264. See ymbfléogan.

flór, m., floor, ground: ns. 39, 318;
ds. flóra, 110; ap. flóras, 70.

flyge, m., flight: ds. 112.

flyht, m., flight: ds. flyhte, 112.

folc, n., people, multitude: as. folc, 686; ip. folcum, 559.

folde, f., earth, ground: ns. 213; gs.
foldan, 3, 603; ds. foldan, 495, 546; as. foldan, 264, 533, 686.

folgað, m., service: as. 329.

folgian, W2., follow, attend: pp.
folgad, 559.

folm, palm, hand: ip. folmum, 713.

fón, red., receive: imp. 2s. fóh, 686.
See on-, ymbfón.

for, prep., w. dat., before, in the presence of, for, because of,

through, by: 44, 50, 62, 69, 74, 83, 106, 197, 228, 282, 380, 394, 423, 429, 665, 673.

foran, see beforan.

forbēgan, WI., bend, crush: pret.
3s. forbēgde, 468.

forbrecan, IV, break, break in pieces, destroy: pret. 3s. forbræc, 468.

forgifan, V, give: pret. 3s. forgeaf, 488.

forgildan, III, pay back, requite:
pret. 3s. forgeald, 418, 578.

forgitan, V, forget: pret. 3p. for-gēaton, 642.

forht, adj., fearful, terrified: nsm.
76; npm. wk. forhtan, 620.

forlǣtan, red., let go, send forth, forsake, abandon, lose: 3s. forlǣteð, 292; pret. 3s. forlēt, 545;
pp. forlēton, 69.

forscrifan, I, proscribe, condemn:
pp. forscrifen, 33.

forscyppan, VI, transform, disfigure, mar, blight: pp. npm.
forscepène, 72.

forð, adv., out, forth, forward, thenceforth: 248, 324, 402, 475, 566.

forðon, adv., *wherefore, therefore,
hence:* 120, 338; forþon, 283, 304, 485, 551; forþan, 194.

forweorðan, III, be destroyed, perish: pret. 3s. forwearð, 21; 3p.
forwurdon, 197.

forwundian, W2., wound grievously: pp. forwundod, 131.

fōt, m., foot: dp. fōtum, 533.

frætwian, see gefrætwian.

fram, prep., w. dat., from: 177, 178, 439; from, 496.

frēcne, adj., bold, wicked: apm. 284.

frēferian, W2., comfort, console:
pres. p. ds. frēfergendum, 318.

frēobearn, n., noble child: ns. 289.

frēodrihten, m., noble lord: ns. 435, 547; as. 566, 641.

frignan, see gefrignan.

from, see fram.

fruma, m., ruler, prince: ns. 561.
See ordfruma.

frumbearn, n., first-born child: ns.
470.

ful, adv., full, very: 152, 226, 684;
full, 322. See firen-, sorh-, synfull.

fulwiht, m. or n., baptism: gs. fulwihtes, 546.

furðor, adv., further: 225, 445.

fyllan, WI., fill: pp. gefylled, 137.
See āfyllan.

fȳr, n., fire: ns. 264; is. fȳre, 79, 325; fȳr, 97; as. 335.

*fȳrclom, m., fiery chain: ip. fȳrclommum, 39.

fyrd, f., army, host: ds. fyrde, 470.

fyrhtan, see āfyrhtan.

*fȳrlēoma, m., fiery light or radiance: ns. 128.

*fȳrloca, m., fiery cell or dungeon:
ds. fȳrlocan, 58.

fyrndagas, mp., olden days: d.
fyrndagum, 463.

G.

galga, m., gibbet, cross: ds. galgan, 511, 550.

Galilēa, pr. n., Galilee: ds. Galilēam, 524, 527, 531.

gān, anv., go: pret. 3s. ēode, 520;
imp. 2p. gāð, 617.

gār, m., spear: ip. gārum, 511.

gāst, m., spirit, soul: ns. 126, 682, 721; gs. gāstes, 527, 550, 572,

646; as. 14, 562; np. gástas, 51, 630, 653, 732; gp. gásta, 244; vp. gástas, 471.

gástlice, adv., spiritually: 301.

gēar, n., year: gp. gēara, 503.

geara, adj., prepared, ready: nsf.
geara, 693.

gēara, see ungēara.

geard, see middangeard.

gēardagas, mp., the olden days, days of yore: dp. gēardagum, 368.

gearwian, W2, make ready, prepare: opt. 1p. gearwian, 287.

geat, n., gate: ns. 649.

gebēgan, W1., depress, abase, crush: pp. gebēged, 446.

gebīdan, I, abide, await, endure:
pret. 1s. gebād, 496; inf. 108.

gebindan, III, bind, fasten, secure:
pp. gebunden, 38, 58, 104, 324.

geblētsian, W2, bless: pret. 3s.
geblētsode, 242.

geblondan, red., mingle, mix: pp.
geblonden, 129.

gecwēme, adj., pleasing, acceptable:
gpm. gecwēmra, 217.

gecweðan, V, speak, say: pres. 3s. gecwæð[?], 627; pret. 1s. gecwæð, 123.

gecȳðan, W1., reveal, show, prove:
pret. 3s. gecȳdde, 200; pp.
gecȳðed, 560.

gedēlan, W1., distribute, allot, give out: pret. 3s. gedēlde, 19.

gedūfan, II, dive, plunge, sink:
pret. 3s. gedēaf, 670; inf. 30.

gefæstnian, W2, fix, set firmly, establish: pret. 3s. gefestnade, 3;
pp. gefæstnod, 517.

gefatian, W1., fetch, summon: inf.
521.

gefēa, m., joy: as. gefēan, 199.

gefeallan, red., fall, plunge: pret.
3s. gefēol, 712.

gefēlan, W1., feel: pret. 3s. gefēlde, 77.

gefēran, W1., fare: pp. gefēred, 6a.

geferian, W1., carry, lead, bring:
inf. 148; pp. geferde, 92.

geflēman, W1., put to flight: pp.
geflēmed, 463.

gefrætwian, W2., adorn: pp. ge-frætewod, 308, 649.

gefrignan, III, learn, hear: pret. 1s.
gefregn, 526; gefregen, 225.

gefylled, see fyllan.

*geglīdan, I, slip, fall: inf. 376.

gehealdan, red., keep, retain possession of: pret. 3s. gehēold, 347.

*gehēaw, n., gnashing: ns. 339.

gehēnan, W1., humble, overthrow:
pp. gehēned, 190.

gehēran, W1., hear: 1s. gehēre, 133;
pret. 1p. gehērdon, 237; inf. 171, 328, 338, pp. gehēred, 333, 607.

gehrēowan, red., grieve, cause to rue or repent: pret. 3s. gehrēaw, 374; gerēaw, 489; inf. 540.

gehrīnan, I, touch, lay hold of: inf.
gerīnan, 267.

gehwā, pron., each, every: ism, gehwǣm, 581.

gehwylc, pron., each, every, every one: nsm. 285, 432 (ānra ge-hwylc, every one, all); asm.
gehwilcne, 243; gehwelcne, 12;
isn. gehwylce, 551.

gehycgan, W3., consider, be mindful, take heed, conceive, understand: inf. 194, 283; gehicgan, 179.

gehȳdan, W1., hide, conceal: inf., 101.

gehygd, n., thought, plan: as. 344.

gelǽdan, W 1., lead: pret. 2s. gelǽddest, 660 ; 3s. gelǽdde, 553. opt.
pret. 1s. gelǽdde, 505; inf. 402;
pp. gelǽdde, 88.

gelǽran, W 1., persuade: pret. 2s.
gelǽrdæst, 53; 3s. gelǽrde, 413.

gelecgan, W 1., lay, put: pret. 3p.
gelegdon, 539.

gelǽfan, W 1., believe, believe in, trust: 1p. gelēfað, 291; pret. 3s.
gelēfde, 246; 1p. gelȳfdon, 416;
inf. 251.

gelic, adj., like: npm. gelice, 307;
sup. nsn. gelicost, 163.

*gelihtan, W 1., descend to, ap-roach, come: inf. 431.

gelimpan, III, happen, befall, come to pass: pret. 3s. gelamp, 24, 175, 478; gelomp, 125, 534, 569.

*gelūtian, W 2., hide: inf. 130.

gemercian, W 2., mark out, measure: pp. subst. gsn. gemearcodes, 724.

gemet, n., strength: ns. 491.

gemētan, W 1., meet, come across:
pret. 2s. gemēttes, 697.

gemunan, anv., remember, be mindful of, muse, ponder: pret. 1s.
gemunde, 504; 3s. gemunde, 726;
opt. 1p. gemunan, 202, 207, 286;
inf. 646.

genemned, see nemnan.

geniman, IV, take hold of, seize:
pret. 3s. genōm, 544, 680A.

genip, n., mist, darkness: ds. genipe, 102; as. 180, 446.

geofon, n., ocean, sea: ds. geofene, 10.

gēomor, adj., mournful: nsn. wk.
(? adv.) gēomre, 340.

geond, prep., w. accus., *through,
over, about, throughout, among:*

73, 129, 224, 270, 272, 320, 341, 353, 386, 583, 603, 644, 727.

geondwlitan, I, look or see through:
inf. 9.

georne, adv., eagerly, earnestly, gladly, well, surely: 595, 646;
comp. geornor, 705.

gēotan, see āgēotan.

gerǣcan, W 1., reach: inf. 169.

gerēowan, see gehrēowan.

gerim, n., number: gs. gerimes, 502.

gerinan, see gehrinan.

gesǽlig, adj., blessed, happy: npf.
gesǽlige, 296.

gesceaft, f., creation (the heavenly kingdom), creature: ds. gesceft, 664; as. gesceaft, 560; gescæft, 139; gp. gesceafta, 442; gescefta, 584; ap. gescefta, 203.

gescearian, W 1., separate, divide:
inf. 609.

gescēawian, W 2., behold, see: 3p.
gescēawiað, 541.

gesēcan, W 1., seek, go to, approach, visit: 3s. gesēceð, 212; inf. 436.

gesegnian, W 2., bless, sign with the cross: 3s. gesegnað, 360; gesēnað, 615.

gesellan, W 1., give; betray, sell: 1s.
geselle, 685; pret. 3s. gesalde, 575.

gesēne, adj., seen, evident, clear:
nsn. 230, 441.

gesēon, V, see, behold: pret. 3s.
geseah, 716; 1p. gesāwon, 390, 538; 3p. gesāwon, 382, 469;
gesāwun, 718; gesēgon, 529.

geset, n., seat, dwelling, habitation:
ap. geseotu, 602.

gesettan, W 1., *set, fix, establish,
appoint, decree:* pret. 3s. gesette, 4, 13, 494 ; pp. geseted, 678;
gesette, 573.

gesittan, V, sit, lean: pret. 3s. gesæt, 432, 470.

gestigan, I, ascend to, mount up to: 3p. gestigað, 612.

gestondan, VI, stand: pret. 3s. gestód, 241, 530.

gestrēonan, W1., obtain: inf. 597.

geswīðan, W1., strengthen: pret. 3s. geswīðde, 572.

gĕt, see gȳt.

getenge, adj., near, at hand, pressing hard: nsf. 711.

geþencan, be mindful of, consider, reflect upon, resolve: 1p. geþencað, 290; pret. 1s. geþóhte, 187; 3s. geþóhte, 316, 371; inf. 644.

geþēode, n., tongue, people: ap. 19.

geþēon, I, thrive, profit: pret. 3s. geþēah, 576.

geþingian, W2., promise (literally, agree to, settle): pp. geþingod, 598.

geþóht, m., thought: ap. geþóhtas, 206, 284, 488.

geþolian, W1., w. acc., suffer, endure, bear: 1p. geþoliað, 399; inf. 636; w. gen., suffer loss or lack of, forfeit: inf. 273.

geþrōwian, W2., suffer: pret. 3s. geþrōwode, 548, 666.

gewald, n., power, control, dominion, possession: ds. gewalde, 415; gewealde, 687; as. 55, 86, 107, 118, 174.

geweorðan, III, become, please (seem good): pret. 3s. gewearð, 256, 261, 669.

gewinn, n., struggle, war (? distress, tribulation): as. 232.

gewitan, I, depart: imp. 2s. gewit, 691.

geworden, see weorðan.

gewundod, see wundian.

gewunian, W2., dwell in, inhabit: inf. 326; pp. npm. gewunade, 103.

gewunnon, see winnan.

gewyrcan, W1., make, create, earn, deserve: 1p. gewyrcað, 303; pret. 1s. geworhte, 472.

gif, conj., if: 251, 290, 302, 674, 688.

gifan, see forgifan.

gifre, adj., greedy, rapacious: npm. 32, 192.

gifu, f., gift, grace: as. gife, 646; is. gife, 572.

gildan, see forgildan.

gim, m., gem, jewel: ip. gimmum, 649.

gin, see ongin.

gingra, m., vassal, follower, disciple: np. gingran, 191, 531; ap. gingran, 522, 526, 572.

ginnan, see onginnan.

gitan, see be-, forgitan, ongeotan.

giunga, adj., young: nsm. wk. giunga, 511.

glēaw, adj., sagacious, discerning: nsm. 350.

glidan, see geglidan.

gnornian, W2., grieve, bewail, lament, murmur: pret. 3s. gnornede, 280; inf. 274; pres. p. apm. gnornende, 134.

gnornunge, f., wailing, lamentation: ns. 334.

God, m., God: ns. 18, 32, 56, 109, 192, 244, 260, 281, 288, 350, 355, 430, 441, 493, 516, 531, 550, 574, 599; gs. Godes 10, 166, 191, 269, 280, 289, 340, 358, 368, 470, 474, 528, 565, 614, 622, 646, 651, 693, 719; ds. Gode, 82, 234, 314; as. 97, 524, 705.

gōd, adj., good: comp. asm. bet-tran, 49; ipf. sēlrum, 45.

gōd, n., good, blessing, benefit: gp.
 gōda, 186, 331.

gongan, red., go: imp. 2s. gong, 708; gang, 701; inf. 526, 614, 651.
 See āgangan.

grǣdig, adj., greedy: npm. grǣdige, 192; grēdige, 32.

*grǣfhūs, n., house of the dead: ns.
 708.

grēne, adj., green, fair, pleasant:
 asf. 287.

grēosan, see begrēosan.

grim, adj., grim, dire, horrible: nsn.
 708; apm. grimme, 260.

grīpan, I, seize, take hold of, snatch, carry off: imp. 2s. grīp, 701; inf.
 269.

*gristbitunge, f., gnashing of teeth:
 ns. 334.

grund, m., bottom, deep, depth, abyss: gs. grundes, 701; ds.
 grunde, 269, 633, 703, 726; as. 31, 91, 149, 450, 456, 485, 637; ap. grundas, 10, 134, 260.

*grynde, n., abyss: gs. gryndes, 331.

gryre, m., terror: ns. 433; as. 454,
 ns. (? is.) 728. See hinsīðgryre.

gylden, adj., golden: nsn. 649.

gylp, n., pride, vaunt, boasting: ns.
 254.

gȳt, adv., yet, still, yet again: 160, 405, 408, 570; gēt, 225.

H.

habban, W3., have, possess, hold, keep, get: 1s. hebbe, 88, 92; 2s.
 hafast, 678, 706; hafus, 64; 3s.
 hafað, 587, 598; 1p. habbað 61;
 2p. habbað, 618; 3p. habbað, 144, 354, 508; pret. 1s. hefde, 82; 3s. hæfde, 2, 200, 226, 404, 444, 462,

573; hefde, 33; 1p. hæfdon, 151;
 hefdon, 44; 2p. hæfdon, 485; 3p.
 hæfdon, 68, 70, 329, 527, 719; opt.
 2s. hæbbe, 674, 710; inf. 29, 37, 43, 450, 591, 643. Negative: 1p. nabbað, 335. See wiðhabban.

hād, m., nature, condition, relation:
 as. 438, 495.

hæft, m., captive, servant: np. hæftas, 631; dp. hæftum, 319; ap. hæftas, 202, 717.

hæft, m., bond, fetter, captivity: dp.
 hæftum, 92, 148, 505, 553; ip. hæftum, 427.

Hǣlend, m., Saviour (= both Christ and God): ns. 219, 281, 493, 607; gs. Hǣlendes, 153, 382, 426, 486, 648; Hǣlendes, 86; ds.
 Hǣlende, 364, 595, 645; Hǣlende, 54; as. 544, 576, 683.

hæleð, m., man, hero, warrior: np.
 heleð, 47; gp. hæleða, 194, 270, 400, 680A, 658; hæleþa, 582.

hǣlo, f., health, well-being, salvation: as. 582.

hǣðen, adj., heathen: npm. hǣþene, 540; gpm. hǣþenre, 268.

haldan, red., hold, keep, retain: 3s.
 haldeð, 260A.

hālig, adj., holy: nsm. 56, 81, 565, 586, 592; dsm. hāligum, 513; wk. hālgan, 234, 291, 567; dsn. wk.
 hālgan, 417; asm. hāligne, 328, 415, 528, 562; wk. hālgan, 202;
 asn. wk. hālige, 348; npm. 222, 460; apm. hālige, 680; ipf. hāl-gum, 656.

hālsian, W2., beseech, adjure: 1s.
 hālsige, 422.

hām, m., home, abode, dwelling: ns.
 38, 96, 100, 216; gs. hāmes, 138;
 ds. hām, 111, 219, 257, 504, 567,

660; as. 25, 49, 178, 276, 278, 294, 337, 345, 362, 415; adverbial accus. hām, 88, 92, 148, 427, 431, 505, 553.

hand, see hond.

handgeweorc, n., work of the hands, handiwork: ns. 489.

handþegen, m., servant: ns. 485.

hāt, adj., hot: nsm. 159, 281, 319; asm. hātne, 456, 485; asn. wk. hāte, 193, 419; npm. hāte, 99.

hāt, n., heat: na. 132; as. 335.

hātan, red., bid, command, name: 1s. hāte, 694; 3s. hāteð, 601; pret. 3s. hēt, 484, 521, 523, 724; pp. hāten, 367, 543.

hāte, adv., hotly: 341.

hē, pron., he: nsm. 3, 4, 9, 11, 13, 19, 33, 77, 78(2), 80, 117, 147, 163, 190, 195, 200(2), 201, 212, 218, 260A, 265, 266, 279, 284, 292, 306, 317, 347, 369, 370, 372, 375, 380, 464, 467, 518, 520, 524, 525, 544, 545, 549, 553, 560, 571, 577, 584, 667, 670, 680A, 716, 721, 726(2); nsf. hēo, 409; nsn. hit, 22, 125, 306, 534, 569; gsm. his, 6, 13, 14, 127, 191, 243, 283, 326, 360, 376, 392, 545, 549, 550, 572, 580, 585, 588, 589, 592, 615, 623, 668; dsm. him. 51, 118, 125, 196, 211, 226, 235, 260, 281, 284, 374, 389, 428, 448, 568, 576, 578, 586, 611, 672, 673, 675, 690, 722; asm. hine, 154, 246, 376, 460, 566, 724; np. hīe, 23, 74, 346, 469, 474, 542, 635, 639, 641, 643; hī, 361, 378, 382, 451, 535; hēo, 25, 27, 99, 297, 312, 329, 345, 499, 506, 529, 541, 624; hē, 335, 718; gp. heora, 66, 223, 308, 323, 373; dp. him, 22, 24, 240, 249, 342, 379, 436, 452(2), 458, 460, 540, 622, 626, 639, 643, 696; hym, 70; ap. hīe, 359, 360; hēo, 67, 310, 445, 615; hē, 192, 479.

hēafod, n., head: as. 382.

hēah, adj., high, deep: nsf. hēh, 707; dsn. wk. hēan, 202; asm. hēanne, 17; sup. asf. hēhstan, 694.

hēahgetimber, n., lofty building: ap. hēahgetimbra, 29.

healdan, see ge-, ymbhealdan.

healf, f., side: ap. healfe, 610.

hēan, adj., depressed, miserable: nsm. 120.

hēap, m., company, band, host: na. 87, 394; as. 242.

hēaw, see gehēaw.

hēawan, red., strike, cut: pret. 3s. hēow, 511.

hebban, VI, raise, lift, bear up: pret. 1p. hōfan, 154; 3p. hōfon, 460. See āhebban.

hēhengel, m., archangel: ap. hēhenglas, 601.

hēhfæder, m., patriarch: np. 656.

hēhseld, n., throne, lofty hall: ds. hēhselde, 208; as. 47, 372; gp. hēhselda, 43.

hēhsetl, n., throne: as. 220.

Hēlend, see Hǣlend.

heleð, see hæleð.

hell, hyll, f., hell: ns. hell, 707; hel, 193, 700; gs. helle, 70, 98, 133, 456, 467, 485, 631, 723; hylle, 433; ds. helle, 34, 88, 159, 161, 190, 281, 375, 380, 400, 427, 450, 579; hylle, 338, 717; as. helle, 25, 341, 436, 670.

hellesealc, m., retainer of hell, devil: ap. hellescealcas, 133.

hellwaran, mp., the inhabitants of hell: d. hellwarum, 695; helwarum, 431.

holm, m., helmet, protector: ns. 658; as. 252; vs. 164.

help, f., help, aid, support: ds. helpe, 436, 440; as. helpe, 291; help, 582.

helpan, III, help: inf. 99, 493.

hēnan, see gehēnan.

hēnðo, f., humiliation, disgrace: as. 399; inðo, 376.

heofan, II, lament, bewail: pret. 3p. hēofon, 344.

heofencyning, m., king of heaven: ds. heofencyninge, 183, 317, 437.

heofendēma, m., heavenly judge: ns. 658.

heofenþrēat, m., heavenly band: np. heofenþrēatas, 222.

heofon, m., heaven: gs. heofones, 311; heofnes, 56; as. 169, 415; gp. heofona, 278, 348, 618; heofna, 567; dp. heofonum, 16, 151, 276, 328, 345, 372, 467, 563, 565, 670; heofnum, 29, 37, 43, 81, 586. See ūpheofon.

heofonrīce, n., kingdom of heaven: gs. heofenrīces, 422; ds. heofonrīce, 216, 562, 680.

heolstor, n., place of concealment, retreat: gs. heolstres, 101.

heonon, adv., hence: 424, 654; heonan, 397.

heorodrēorig, adj., mournful, sad: nsf. 700.

heorte, f., heart: ns. 283.

hēr, adv., here: 93, 102, 105, 132, 210, 262, 273.

hēran, WI., obey: opt. 1p. hēran, 595; inf. 54, 183, 234, 317, 364, 645. See gehēran.

herde, m., keeper, lord: ns. 160.

hereweorc, n., warlike deed, fight: gs. hereweorces, 399.

herian, WI., praise: 3p. herigað, 47, 222, 656, 661.

herm, adj., malicious: nsm. 682.

hider, adv., hither: 423, 686.

hiht, see hyht.

hinsīðgryre, m., terror of death: as. insīðgryre, 456.

hīred, m., household, company, train: ns. 376, 592; ds. hirede, 423; as. 348.

hlāf, m., loaf: ap. hlāfas, 673.

hleonian, W2., lean, recline: pret. 3s. hleonade, 433.

hlūd, adj., loud: nsm. 467, 607; nsm. wk. lūde, 340 (? adv.); inf. hlūddre, 601.

hnīgan, I, bend, bow down, sink: pret. 3p. hnigon, 533; hnigan, 240; inf. 375; nīgan, 208.

hof, n., hall, dwelling: as. 193.

hōfian, see behōfian.

holdlīce, adv., graciously, kindly: 311.

holm, m., sea: as. holm, 17.

hond, f., hand: ns. 565; ds. handa, 433; as. 580, 611; is. hond, 360, 615; ip. hondum, 268, 460, 540, 544, 680A, 700; handum, 169, 417, 437, 706.

hraðe, adv., straightway: 229.

hrēam, m., cry, clamor: ns. rēam, 717.

hrefnan, see refnan.

hrēowan, see gehrēowan.

hreðer, m., breast, interior: ds. reðre, 99.

hrīnan, see gehrīnan.

hrōpan, red., cry out, scream: pret. 3p. hrēopan, 319.

hū, conj., how: 33, 179, 196, 352, 499, 639, 647, 699, 704, 707.

hund, n., hundred: ns. 723.

hungor, m., hunger: ds. hungre, 673.

hūru, adv., even, especially: 171, 523.

hūs, n., house: as. 710. See græf-, witehūs.

hwā, pron., who, what: nsm. hwā, 17; asn. hwæt, 109. See æg-, gehwā.

hwǣr, conj., adv., where, whither: 36, 529. See æghwǣr.

hwæt, interj., lo: 44, 132, 233, 439; adv., how: 316.

hwæðer, conj., used as an interr. part. introducing a direct question: 277.

hwearfian, W2., wander about: pret. 3p. hwearfedon, 72.

hweorfan, III, turn, depart, go, wander or roam about: pret. 3s. hwearf, 190, 400; 3p. hworfon, 71; hweorfan, 341; inf. 120, 270, 419.

hwīl, f., time: as. hwīle, 255; ip. hwīlum, as adv., sometimes: 132; correlative, sometimes . . . sometimes, now . . . now: 133, 135, 713, 715, 716, 717.

hwīt, adj., white: npm. hwīte, 220.

hwonne, conj., when: 622.

hwylc, see æg-, gehwylc.

hwyrft, m., course: ip. hwyrftum, 631 (? wheeling, circling). See ymbhwyrft.

hycgan, W3., think, take heed, purpose: pret. 1s. hogade, 84; inf. 594. See ge-, oferhycgan.

hŷdan, see gehŷdan.

hygd, see ge-, oferhygd.

hyht, m., hope, expectation, joy: ds.

hyhte, 70, 335; hihte, 176, 643; as. hyht, 695.

hyhtlic, adj., joyous: comp. nsm. hyhtlicra, 216; gsm. hihtlicran, 138.

hyhtwilla, m., hope of joy: gs. hyhtwillan, 159.

hyll, see hell.

I.

ic, pron., I: ns. 48, 81, 84, 85, 88, 89, 92, 97, 108, 110, 112, 120, 123, 124, 130(2), 133, 138, 140, 141, 145, 148, 156, 168, 169, 173, 176, 177, 179(2), 181, 184, 187, 225, 248, 250, 268, 273, 275, 276, 410, 422, 424, 472, 481, 503, 504, 505, 509, 512, 526, 629, 685, 694; ds. mē, 49, 82, 86, 109, 141, 174, 175, 499, 686; as. mē, 489, 498, 510, 677; np. wē, 37, 41, 44, 54, 60, 61, 95, 101(2), 115, 150, 151, 154, 202, 208, 230, 233, 234, 236, 255, 256, 290, 299, 383, 390, 391, 398, 538, 554, 556, 590, 595, 597, 645; dp. ūs, 63, 99, 115, 198, 203, 241, 253, 261, 277, 294, 430, 556, 598, 665; ūsic, 256; ap. ūs, 53, 101, 287, 289, 291, 292, 301, 553, 589; dual n. wit, 411, 412, 414, 416, 419; d. unc, 418; a. unc, 413.

īdel, adj., empty, vain: nsn. 254.

ilca, pron., same, very: asn. ilce, 591.

in, prep., w. dat., in, within, on: 10, 29, 43, 48, 49, 58, 80, 81, 84, 102, 108, 128, 151, 158, 179, 203, 216, 219, 233, 274, 308, 309, 328, 368, 369, 380, 409, 435, 450, 463, 479, 508, 524, 531, 556, 593, 657, 664, 717, 731; w. accus., in, into, to: 25, 26, 30, 31, 91, 149, 178, 180, 193, 311, 376, 378, 419, 440, 446, 459, 560, 608, 613, 614, 617, 628, 633, 634, 650, 670, 691.

*indrīfan, I., utter: pret. 3s. indrāf, 80[?].

inneweard, adj., inside, within: 137, 707.

innon, prep., w. dat., in, within: 579.

insīðgryre, see hinsīðgryre.

inðo, see hēnðo.

iren, n., iron: is. īrne, 518.

irnan, III. run: pret. 3s. ran, 712; 3p. urnon, 532.

iū, adv., formerly, once: 44, 81, 151.

iūdǣd, m., former deed: ip. iūdǣd-um, 186.

Iūdas, pr. n., Judas: ns. 574.

L.

lā, interj., oh, ah, indeed: 457, 464, 644, 733. See ēalā.

lǣca, lēca, see ǣglǣca.

*lǣcan, WI., spring or flare up: pret. 3s. lǣhte, 716.

lǣcedōm, m., healing: as. 589.

lǣdan, WI., lead: 3s. lǣdað, 361; pret. 2s. lǣddest, 423; 3s. lǣdde, 566; inf. 398. See ā-, gelǣdan.

lǣran, WI., teach, show, give: inf. 250. See gelǣran.

lǣtan, red., let, suffer; regard as: pret. 3s. lēt, 407, 443; opt. 3s. lǣte, 196. See anfor-, forlǣtan.

land, see lond.

lang, adj., long: sup. nsm. lengust, 606.

langian, W2., impersonal, long for, desire: opt. 3s. lange, 505.

langsum, adj., enduring, sound: asm. langsumne, 250.

lāst, see wrǣclāst.

lāð, adj., evil, grievous, hateful, loathed, loathsome, hostile: gsm.

wk. lāþan, 716; asm. lāðne, 539; wk. lāðan, 178; asm. wk. lāðe, 727; apm. lāðe, 285.

laðian, W2., invite, call: 3s. laðað, 589; 3p. leaðað, 632.

leahtor, m., sin, disgrace, infamy: dp. leahtrum, 263; ap. leahtras, 285.

lēan, n., reward: as. 679.

lēas, adj., destitute of, deprived of; false, perfidious: nsm. 159, 168, 182; nsf. 727; npm. lēase, 331. See dōmlēas.

lēasung, f., lie, lying: dp. lēasun-gum, 62.

lecgan, see gelecgan.

lēfan, see ā-, gelēfan.

lēg, see līg.

lēod, see burhlēod.

lēof, adj., dear, beloved: asm. lēofne, 155.

lēoht, līht, n., light: ns. lēoht, 106, 389, 556; ds. lēohte, 178, 589; līhte, 361; as. lēoht, 28, 141, 253, 311, 449, 591, 617, 658; līht, 68, 679.

lēoht, adj., bright, brilliant: asm. lēohtne, 469; vsm. wk. lēohta, 166.

*lēohtberende, m., light-bearer: ns. 367.

lēoma, m., light, radiance, splendor: as. lēoman, 85, 351, 469. See fȳrlēoma.

-lic, see ge-, ungelic.

licgan, V., lie: inf. 263, 716.

līf, n., life: ns. 596; as. 212, 292, 361.

lifian, W3., live: pres. p. ns. lifi-gende, 574; npm. as subst. lifi-gend, 299; gp. lifigendra, 285; dp. lifigendum, 679.

līg, m., flame: ns. līg, 715; is. līge, 325.

līht, see lēoht.

līhtan, see gelīhtan.

lim, n., limb, member: np. leomu, 155.

limpan, see gelimpan.

*līmwæstm, m., size of limb, stature: ip. limwæstmum, 130.

list, m., f., art, skill: ip. listum, 300.

loca, see fȳrloca.

*locen, n., secret, mystery: as. 300.

lōcian, W2, look, gaze: pret. 3s. lōcade, 727; imp. 2s. lōca, 684; inf. 170.

lofsong, m., song of praise, hymn: gp. lofsonga, 155.

lond, n., land: ns. 215; land, 213; as. land, 270.

londbēwende, m., inhabitant of earth: ap. 684.

lūcan, see onlūcan.

*Lūcifer, pr. n., ns. 367.

lūd, see hlūd.

lūtian, see gelūtian.

lyft, m., air: as. 263.

lyge, m., lie, deceit: as. 53.

lȳhtan, W1, give light: 3s. lȳhteð, 105.

lyt, see ymblyt.

lȳðre, adv., miserably, wretchedly: 62.

M.

mā, n., more (others): n. 113.

mā, adv., more, again: 140.

mægen, n., might, strength, power: ns. 491; ds. mægne, 519; as. mægen, 550.

mægð, f., race, progeny, tribe: ds. mægðe, 425; dp. mægðum, 272.

mǣl, n., time, appointed time: gs. mǣles, 501; gp. mǣla, 551. See þūsendmǣlum.

mǣnan, W1, lament, mourn: pret. 3p. mǣndon, 386; inf. 134.

mænego, see menego.

mǣre, adj., great, illustrious, noble, splendid: nsm. wk. mǣra, 598; dsf. wk. mǣran, 624; asf. wk. mǣran, 459, 560; asm. wk. mǣre, 353.

mǣst, see micel.

magan, prp., can, be able, may: 1s. mæg, 130, 169, 179; 2s. miht, 696; 3s. mæg, 9, 11, 283, 540; 1p. magon, 101; 3p. magon, 99; pret. 3s. mihte, 338, 493, 519; 3p. mihton, 542; opt. 1s. mæge, 425; 3s. mæge, 351; 1p. mægen, 597; pret. 3s. mihte, 22; 3p. mihten, 500.

man, see mon.

mān, n., sin, crime, guilt; punishment, pain: as. 305, 321.

māra, see micel.

Maria, pr. n., Mary: gs. Marian, 438.

martire, m., martyr: np. martiras, 655.

mearc, f., limit, period: ns. 501.

mecg, m., man: gp. mecga, 334.

mēdla, see onmēdla.

mencgan, W1, mingle: 3p. mencgað, 132.

menego, f. indecl., multitude: ns. 83, 262; mænego, 729 (? gs.); menio, 476; ds. 321; as. mænego, 201, 504; is. menego, 111.

Meotod, m., Creator, God, Christ: ns. 2, 8, 64, 262, 401, 459, 515; Metod, 668; gs. Meotodes, 143, 165, 173, 286, 353, 529; ds.

nǣddre, f., serpent, snake: gs. nǣddran, 412; nēdran, 102; ap. nǣddran, 337.

nǣman, see benǣman.

nǣnig, pron., none, no: nsm. 349;
asm. nǣnigne, 122.

nǣre, næs, see wesan.

næss, see ness.

nāgan, see āgan.

nalles, adv., not, by no means: 42, 327, 449, 693; nales, 28.

nama, m., name: ns. 193.

nān, adj., no: nsm. 517.

ne, adv., not: 50, 54, 79, 99, 105, 115, 130, 138, 140, 145, 169, 170, 171, 179, 183, 195, 266, 317, 332, 408, 412, 542, 576, 629, 695; nē, conj., nor, 94, 95(2), 139(2), 145, 170, 171, 349, 350, 451, 491, 492(2).

nearu, adj., narrow, close, oppressive: asn. nearwe, 634.

nearwe, adv., closely, oppressively:
446.

nēddre, see nǣddre.

nēh, adv., near: 339.

nemnan, W1., name, call: pret. 1p.
nemdon, 383; pp. genemned, 205; 366 (possibly the meaning here is mention).

neoman, see niman.

neorxnawong, m., paradise: ds.
neorxnawonge, 481.

nēosan, W1., seek, visit: inf. 113.

neowol, adj., deep, profound: dsn.
wk. neowlan, 102; asm. wk.
neowlan, 31, 91; asn. wk. neowle, 180, 446.

nergan, W1., save: pres. p. nsm.
nergende, 570; asm. nergendne, 346.

Nergend, m., Saviour: gs. Nergendes, 377.

ness, m., ground, earth, chasm: dp.
nessum, 135; ap. nessas, 31, 91.

nīgan, see hnīgan.

niht, f., night: gs. nihtes (adverbial, by night), 499; ap. 426, 571.

niman, IV, take, choose: pret. 1p.
nāmon, 417; opt. 1p. neoman, 198.
See geniman.

nis, see wesan.

nīð, m., *enmity, hatred, spite, malice;
affliction, tribulation:* as. 377, 412, 634 (? n. here).

niðer, adv., down: 91, 135; niðǣr, 31.

*niðsyn, f., grievous sin: ip. nīðsynnum, 180.

nīwe, adj., new: asn. 481.

nō, see nā.

nū, adv., now, just now, but now, immediately, now henceforth: 40, 46, 57, 64, 92, 107, 141, 156, 157,
177, 181, 188, 230, 231, 262, 392, 395, 413, 422, 427, 441, 447, 580, 592, 598, 628, 629, 684, 733.

nū, conj., now that, since: 110, 387, 393.

nymðe, conj., except, save: 18;
nimðe, 493; nymþe, 331, 335, 350, 677.

O.

of, prep., w. dat., of, from, out of:
34, 93, 146, 161, 173, 181, 187, 202,
257, 258, 267, 356, 467, 505, 516, 553, 565, 604, 605, 670.

of, adv., off, absent: 574.

ofer, prep., w. dat., over, above: 215, 241; w. accus., over, above, 264, 602, 616, 627, 684.

oferfeohtan, III, conquer, vanquish:
pp. oferfohten, 405.

oferhycgan, W3., contemn, scorn, fromunce: pret. 3p. oferhygdon, 465; inf. 252; oferhycgen, 305.

oferhygd, n., pride: gs. oferhýdes, 114; dp. oferhygdum, 50, 69, 197; oferhigdnum, 228; ap. oferhýda, 370.

oferwinnan, III, overcome, vanquish: pp. oferwunnen, 462.

ofost, f., haste: ip. ofostum, 629.

oft, adv., oft, often: 152, 271, 329, 639, 642.

ofþyncan, W1., mislike, displease, be an offence to: pret. 3s. ofþúhte, 247.

on, prep., w. dat., on, in, into, for, from: 5, 8, 15, 22, 37, 39, 45, 67, 99, 110, 112(2), 131, 143, 159, 206, 231, 237, 246, 263, 265, 276, 278, 281, 286, 290, 299, 303, 324, 345, 368, 372, 414, 417, 478, 481, 496, 502, 504, 510, 511, 521, 549, 550, 558, 563, 575, 586, 597, 600, 680, 712, 721, 726, 733; w. acc., on, upon, into, to, by, for: 89, 139, 263, 347, 404, 406, 465, 474, 476, 515, 533, 539, 578, 580, 610, 611, 639, 681, 682, 683, 685, 698, 718.

on, adv., w. hwǽr forming a rel. adv., whereon, where: 530.

onǽlan, W1., kindle, burn, heat: pp. onǽled, 40, 97, 322, 341, 421.

oncnáwan, red., recognize, understand, believe: inf. 542.

ondetan, W1., confess: inf. 225.

onfón, red., receive: pret. 3s. onféng, 566.

ongēan, prep., w. dat., towards, to meet: 301.

ongeotan, V, perceive, understand, conceive: opt. 1p. ongeotan, 301.

ongin, n., action, undertaking: ns. 547.

onginnan, III, begin (often periphrastic): pret. 3s. ongan, 78, 248; 3p. ongunnon, 731; opt. 1p. onginnen, 645.

onlúcan, II, unlock, disclose, reveal: opt. 1p. onlúcan, 300.

onmēdla, m., pride, presumption: ds. onmēdlan, 429; anmēdlan, 74.

onsēon, f., sight, appearance: ns. 61.

onstellan, W1., institute, be the author of: 3s. onstalde, 369; 3p. onstaldon, 114.

onstyrian, W2., stir up: inf. 271.

ontýnan, W1., disclose, reveal: pp. ontýned, 557, 594.

onwacan or onwæcnan, red., spring, be born: pret. 2s. onwóce, 439; 3p. onwócon, 476.

onwald, m., power: as. 60, 118.

onwecnan, W1., awake: 3p. onwecnað, 604.

open, adj., revealed, opened: nsf. 406.

ord, m., beginning: as. 114.

ordfruma, m., source, author, creator, prince, chief: ns. 239, 374, 442, 659; ap. ordfruman, 21.

orðonc, n., art, skill, invention: as. 18.

óðer, pron., other, another, second: asn. 212; ism. óðre, 75; isn. óðre, 229; npm. óðre, 625; dpm. óðrum, 26.

oðfæstan, W1., fasten on: pp. oðfæsted, 445.

oððæt, conj., until: 478, 702, 728.

P.

Pētrus, pr. n., Peter: ns. 536; ds. Pētre, 523.

R.

rǣcan, W1., reach: pret. 3s. rǣhte, 437. See gerǣcan.

rǣd, m., advice, counsel: as. 250.

rǣdbora, m., counselor: np. rǣdboran, 500.

rægn, m., rain: gs. rægnas, 11.

rēam, see hrēam.

rēd, see dægrēd.

refnan, W1., carry out, bring to pass: inf. hrefnan, 500.

reord, f., speech, language: as. reorde, 35.

reordian, W2., speak: pret. 3s. reordade, 75; 3p. reordadon, 66; inf. 732; pres. p. nsm. reordende(?), 626.

rest, f., rest, place of rest: as. reste, 612, 619.

rēðe, adj., fierce, savage: npm. 104.

reðer, see hreðer.

rice, n., rule, dominion, kingdom: ns. 693; gs. rices, 347, 500, 688; ds. 278, 308, 368, 618, 651; as. 260A, 614. See heofonrice.

ricene, adv., quickly, straightway: 708.

riht, n., justice, right: as. 207, 347.

riht, adj., regular, true, real: nsm. 260A, 688.

rim, n., number, multitude: as. 401, 420. See ende-, ge-, unrim.

riman, see āriman.

rinnan, see irnan.

risan, see ārisan.

rodor, m., heaven: gp. rodora, 688; rodera, 347, 612.

S.

saca, see andsaca.

sǣ, m., f., sea: ds. 5; as. 9.

sǣlig, see gesǣlig.

sanct, m., saint: np. sanctas, 240, 355.

sang, m., song, singing: ns. 663; as. 235; song, 45, 143; is. sange, 145. See lofsong.

sār, adj., grievous: gsf. wk. sāran, 28.

Sātān, Sātānus, pr. n., Satan: ns. Sātān, 712; Sātānus, 371, 447; vs. Sātānus, 692.

sāwol, f., soul: np. sāwla, 653; sāwle, 296; gp. sāwla, 573; dp. sāwlum, 145, 266; ap. sāwla, 398; sāwle, 407.

scacan, VI, hurry, speed: inf. 263.

scēadan, see āscēadan.

-sceaft, see gesceaft.

scealc, see hellescealc.

scealu, f., throng, multitude: as. sceale, 268.

scearian, see gescearian.

scēat, m., corner, region, surface: ap. scēatas, 3, 603.

sceaða, m., criminal, wretch, fiend: np. sceaðan, 72; gp. sceaðena, 633; sceaðana, 57.

scēawian, W2., see, behold: pret. 3p. scēawodon, 535; inf. 524. See gescēawian.

sced, n., shade, darkness: gs. scedes, 106.

sceldburg, f., fortress, city of refuge: ds. sceldbyrig, 309.

Sceppend, see Scyppend.

scēoðan, VI, hurt, harm: inf. 146.

scima, m., light, splendor: ns. 352; gloom: ds. sciman, 106.

scinan, I, shine, gleam, glitter, be bright: 3s. scineð, 223, 352; 3p. scinað, 214, 295, 309, 652; opt. 3s. scine, 211.

scinnn, m., demon, evil spirit: np. scinnum, 72.

scír, adj., bright, resplendent: def. wk. scíran, 177.

scræf, n., cavern, hollow, den: as. 129, 412, 633, 727; scref, 26, 73. See witescræf.

scríðan, I. glide in: 3p. scríþað, 631.

scrifan, see forscrifan.

scúfan, II. shove, thrust: 3p. scúfað, 633; pret. 3s. scéaf, 445.

sculan, prp., must, have to, be destined to, shall, should, ought: 1s. sceal, 48, 112, 120, 157, 171, 184, 188, 273; 3s. sceal, 194, 262, 304; 1p. sceolon, 231, 554; sceolum, 41; 3p. sceolon, 270, 506, 551, 636; sceolum, 30; pret. 3s. sceolde, 375; 1p. sceoldon, 235, 412, 419; sceoldan, 37; scealdon, 54; 3p. sceoldon, 326, 643; sceolden, 27.

scúra, m., shower: ap. scúran, 11.

scuwa, m., shadow: as. scuwan, 455.

scyldig, adj., guilty: asn. wk. scyldige, 33.

scyppan, see forscyppan.

Scyppend, m., Creator: ns. 244, 563; Scypend, 57; Sceppend, 309; gs. Sceppendes, 106; as. 535, 680A.

scyrian, see bescyrian.

se, sé, demon. pron., demon. adj., defin. art., that, the, he, she, it; rel. who, which, that: nsm. 14, 34, 126, 183, 205, 210, 243, 247, 277, 283, 288, 294, 304(2), 316, 338, 355, 396, 406, 413(2), 457, 458, 466, 484, 487, 488, 494, 511, 532, 543, 575, 665(2), 704, 715, 724; nsf. séo, 405, 576; nsn. þæt, 1, 17, 21, 322, 325, 355, 358, 366, 373, 374, 457, 493, 540, 547, 583, 646, 665; gsm. þæs, 174, 701; ðæs, 416, 531; þes, 716; ðes, 114; gsf. þǽre, 172; gsm. þæs, 231, 330, 309, 418, 434, 490, 501, 571; ðæs, 101, 247; ðes, 77; ðes, 115; see also þæs, conj.; dsm. þǽm, 239, 364; ðǽm, 179, 219, 274; þám, 257, 291, 365, 373, 504, 557, 567, 711; ðám, 74; þán, 423; dsf. þǽre, 177, 470, 624; ðǽre, 321, 664; dsn. þǽm, 521; ðǽm, 202; þám, 193, 417, 519; asm. þone, 149, 178, 202, 209, 252, 332, 337, 378, 637, 643, 669, 702, 718; ðone, 30, 31, 46, 91; asf. þá, 139, 201, 459, 560, 580, 611, 694; asn. þæt, 20, 26, 33, 73, 89, 129, 179, 184, 193, 200, 220, 255, 290, 298, 303, 348, 353, 365, 446, 463, 473, 494, 578, 591, 628, 633, 634, 691, 727; isn. ðý, 120; þé, 705; np. þá, 196, 356, 448, 611, 613, 620(2), 654, 731; ðá, 482; dp. þǽm, 630, 650; þám, 145, 147, 266, 383; ap. þá, 148, 487, 603, 652, 663.

sécan, W1., seek, go, proceed: 3p. sécað, 266. See gesécan.

secg, m., man: np. secgas, 498.

secgan, W3., say, tell, relate, announce, give (thanks, praise), sing: pret. 2s. segdest, 63, 430; 3s. sǽde, 126, 471, 514; 1p. sǽdon, 156; 3p. 464; inf. 235, 523, 552, 696. See ásecgan.

segnian, see gesegnian.

seld, n., seat, hall, home, throne: ds. selde, 173, 187, 202, 663; as. 235, 348, 588. See héahseld.

sele, m., hall, dwelling: ns. 136; ds. 131; as. 332. See windsele.

sĕlra, see gōd.

-elne, see geselne.

seolf, pron., self, very, own: nsm. 309, 404, 462; sylf, 663; wk. seolfa, 4, 57, 124, 244, 260, 275, 390, 355, 306, 430, 600; seolua, 13, 712; selfa, 9; sylfa, 218, 306, 441; gsm. seolfes, 588, 685; asm. sylfne, 545; vs. seolf, 692; npm. seolfe, 23, 590; selfe, 648; seolfa, 145.

seolfor, n., silver: gs. seolfres, 578.

sēon, V, look: inf. 378. See ge-, onsēon.

seoððan, adv., afterwards, thereafter, henceforth: 377, 398, 420, 634.

seoððan, conj., after, since: 77, 452, 706.

serwan, W1., plan, devise, plot against: pret. 3s. serede, 15; 3p. seredon, 498.

setl, see hēhsetl.

settan, W1., set up, establish, fix, trace, travel: pret. 3s. sette, 15; inf. 189. See ā-, gesettan.

sibb, f., friendliness, kindness: as. sibbe, 207. See unsib.

sic, adj., sick at heart, sad: nsm. 275.

sid, adj., broad, wide, spacious: nsm., 704; nsf. 699; dsm. wk. sidan, 131.

side, f., side: ds. sidan, 545.

*sigetorht, adj., glorious in victory: ns. 240.

sigor, m., victory: gs. sigores, 678; gp. sigora, 218.

Simon, pr. n.: ns. 536; ds. 523.

sin, poss. pron., his: asm. sinne, 725.

sinc, n., treasure: as. 578.

singan, III, sing: 3p. singað, 355.

sittan, V, sit, dwell: 3s. siteð, 580, 586; sit, 218; 3p. sittað, 647; inf. 590. See gesittan.

sið, m., journey, time: is. siðe, 75; ap. siðas, 189.

six, num., six: 15.

snotor, adj., wise: nsm. 349; vpm. snotre, 471.

snytero, f., wisdom: ns. 492; as. 207.

some, adv., likewise: 83.

-somne, see ætsomne.

sōna, adv., soon, forthwith: 536, 630.

song, see sang.

sorg, f., sorrow, grief, affliction: gs. sorge, 28; gp. sorga, 696; ip. sorgum, 296.

sorghcearig, adj., sad, sorrowful: nsm. 189.

sorhful, adj., sorrowful: nsm. 275.

sōð, n., truth: as. 207; ds. (tō) sōðe: truly, as a fact, really: 63, 430.

sōð, adj., true: asf. wk. sōðan, 13.

sōðcwide, m., true words, truthful speech: ip. sōðcwidum, 471.

sōðfæst, adj., righteous, just: npm. sōðfæste, 307; wk. sōðfæstan, 611.

*spearca, m., spark: ip. spearcum, 162.

*spearcian, W2, emit sparks: pret. 3s. spearcade, 78.

spēd, f., success, might, abundance: as. 623, 668.

*spellung, f., talk, conversation: as. spellunge, 638.

spreocan, V, speak, say: pret. 1s. spræc, 249; 3s. spræc, 536; inf. 78.

stæf, see endestæf.

stǣlan, W1., lay to one's charge, accuse of, reproach, taunt with: 3p. stǣleð, 640.

stān, m., stone: ns. 517; ap. stānas, s. 672.

standan, see stondan.

starian, W2., look, gaze: inf. 140.

staðelian, W2., establish, set up, take up (abode, hām st- sometimes = dwell): pret. 1s. staðelode, 276; 3p. staðeledon, 25; staðelodon, 345.

stefn, f., voice, sound: as. stefne, 172, 238; is. stefne, 36, 601; ip. stefnum, 656.

stellan, see onstellan.

stenc, m., fragrance, odor: ap. stences, 357.

steppan, VI, step: inf. 248.

stician, W2., pierce: pret. 3p. sticedon, 510.

stigan, see ā-, gestīgan.

stīðmōd, adj., stern: nsm. 248.

stōl, see cynestōl.

stondan, VI, stand, be: 3p. stondað, 46, 620; standað, 220; pret. 3s. stōd, 128, 721, 726. See gestondan.

storm, m., uproar, tumult: ns. 387.

strǣt, f., road, way: as. strǣte, 287.

strang, see strong.

strēam, m., current, stream: as. 5.

strengðo, f., strength, power: as. 2, 286.

strēonan, see gestrēonan.

strong, adj., strong, severe, hard, stern, fast, close: nsm. 427; strang, 248; nsn. 322; strang, 226.

stronglic, adj., firm, severe: nsm. 517; nsn. 387.

styde, see burhstyde.

styrian, see onstyrian.

sum, pron., some, one: ns. 57; npm. sume, 263, 270, 542; dsm. sumum, 538.

-sum, see lang-, wynsum.

sunne, f., sun: ds. sunnan, 307; as. sunnan, 4.

sunu, m., son: ns. 63, 119, 243, 396, 529, 580; as. 143, 173, 529; np. 648.

sūsl, n., torment: ns. 692; ds. sūsle, 712; as. sūsel, 41, 64; sūsle, 725; is. sūsle, 52.

*sūslbona, m., devil of torment: np. sūslbonan, 640.

sutol, adj., clear, plain: asn. 89.

swā, adv., so, thus, likewise, such: 14, 22, 61, 65, 83, 126, 191, 256, 280, 349(2), 350, 464, 469, 514, 529, 661, 674, 701.

swā, conj., as: 117, 279, 306, 412, 484, 525, 625, 689, 724.

swarian, see andswarian.

swart, adj., black, dark: nsm. wk. swarta, 704; npm. swarte, 52, 640.

swāt, m., blood: as. 545.

swearte, adv., darkly, dismally, wickedly: 371, 447, 578.

swēg, m., sound, noise, hissing, music: ns. 102, 403, 564; as. 152, 237.

swegl, n., sky, heaven, ether: gs. swegles, 23, 28, 124, 351; ds. swegle, 45, 143; is. swegl, 588; ds. swegle, 648 (? = harmony, music).

swilc, pron., such, so great: nsm. 262; swelc, 79.

swīð, adj., right: comp. asf. wk. swīðran, 580, 611; isf. wk. swīðran, 360, 615.

swīðan, see geswīðan.

swylce, adv., also, thus, so, in such manner: 322, 428, 667.

syllan, W1., give: 3s. syleð, 292;
pret. 3s. sealde, 452. See ā-, gesellan.

symle, adv., ever, always, continually: 286.

syn, f., sin: as. synne, 306; ip. synnum, 131. See nīðsyn.

synfull, adj., sinful: npm. synfulle, 52.

syngian, W2., sin: pret. 1p. syngodon, 230.

T.

tācen, n., sign: as. 89.

tācan, W1., show: 3s. tǣceð, 294.

tān, m., branch: np. tānas, 482.

teala, adv., well, rightly, righteously: 557, 594, 733.

teldan, see beteldan.

telga, m., bough: dp. telgum, 482.

tīne, num., ten: 571.

-tenge, see getenge.

tēona, m., injury, abuse, trouble: as.
tēonan, 497.

tīd, f., time, hour: np. tīda, 709; ip.
tīdum, 45.

tifer, n., victim, sacrifice: ds. tīfre, 575.

til, adj., good: apm. tile, 610.

timber, see hēahgetimber.

tintrega, m., torment: gs. tintregan, 497.

tīr, m., honor, glory: ns. 93.

tō, prep., w. dat., *to, into, towards,
at, for, as*: 63, 70, 87, 88, 92, 111, 117, 148, 149, 153, 176, 190, 196,
198, 208, 239, 249, 254, 269, 279,
288, 291, 315, 335, 357, 361, 362,
375, 400, 403, 415, 427, 430, 436,
437, 440, 454, 458, 461, 494, 495, 506, 527, 533, 546, 554, 562, 567, 589, 598, 618, 619, 624, 625, 632, 643, 651, 660, 672, 686, 687, 703, 723; from: 513, 686; w. gen., to:
531; w. inf. 147.

tō, adv., to, thither: 708.

tōgegnes, prep., w. dat. obj. preceding, for, in readiness for: 693; tōgēnes, 287.

torht, adj., bright, splendid, glorious: nsm. 594; wk. torhta, 294;
nsn. 557; asm. torhtne, 575. See sigetorht.

tōð, m., tooth: gp. tōða, 339.

tōweorpan, III, overthrow, destroy, put an end to: inf. 393; tōwer-pan, 85.

trēow, n., tree: ds. trēo, 417; as.
482.

trum, adj., strong, well: asm.
trumne, 525.

*trumlic, adj., firm, stable: asm. trumlicne, 294.

tūdor, n., offspring, family: as. 659.

twēgen, num., two: nf. twā, 411, 709; af. twā, 610.

twelf, num., twelve: 339, 571.

tȳnan, see ontȳnan.

þ.

þā, adv., then: 76, 84, 160, 181, 190, 225, 247, 248, 330, 369, 371, 379, 385, 400, 403, 405, 407, 408, 416,
432, 437, 443, 462, 470, 474, 483, 489, 501, 526, 530, 536, 558, 564,
569, 573, 574, 669, 675, 680A, 690,
711, 722; ðā, 51, 256, 491, 726.

þā, conj., when: 89, 190, 192, 201, 236, 345, 375, 380, 382, 391, 406, 411, 419, 467, 469, 510, 570, 671, 726; ðā, 3, 25.

þǣr, adv., there, thither, in that:
175, 215, 236, 266, 309, 321, 326,

352, 354, 511, 596, 636, 647, 649, 655, 662; ðær, 24, 245, 323, 339.

þǣr, conj., where, whilst, whereas, in that: 27, 46, 108, 143, 154, 218, 288, 297, 312, 329, 333, 361, 447, 532, 545, 554, 590, 592, 593, 618, 641; if: 234.

þæs, adv., so: 350, 517.

þæs, conj., because, that, from the time that, after: 187, 275, 486, 505, 516, 553, 577; ðæs, 173; þes, 123.

þæt, conj., that, so that, in order that, until: 2, 22, 23, 41, 54, 55, 63, 85, 101, 115, 124, 130, 141, 168, 169, 182, 195, 200, 211, 230, 247, 256, 259, 284, 317, 339, 346, 351, 370, 372, 378, 414, 424, 435, 441, 457, 464, 466, 475, 479, 482, 489, 502, 506, 519, 524, 534, 535, 543, 547, 571, 584, 595, 624, 635, 645, 670, 676, 695, 697, 705, 710, 721, 722, 725; ðæt, 59.

þætte, conj., that: 430.

þanc, m., thanks: as. 552. See orðonc.

þancian, W2, thank: pret. 3p. þanceden, 534.

þanon, adv., thence, from there: 327, 722; þonan, 635; þonon, 475.

þe, rel. particle, indecl., who, which, that: 21, 37, 74, 88, 114, 147, 245, 261, 266, 323, 356, 383, 423, 643, 650, 669; ðe, 17, 146, 183, 210, 283, 304, 338, 364, 365, 413, 557, 575, 620, 654, 665; with þæs, þǣr, þonne, as conjunctions, when: 151, 516; because: ðe, 123, 187, 553, 641; that: 505.

þéah, conj., though, although: 433, 518; þǣh, 265.

þearle, adv., severely, terribly, firmly, tightly: 38, 421.

þearlic, adj., violent, severe: asm. 636.

þegen, m., thane, servant, follower, disciple, warrior: ns. 388, 426; np. þegnas, 326, 662. See hand-, aldorðegn.

þencan, W1., think, consider, mean, intend: 3s. þenceð, 183, 364, 557; 1p. þencað, 208. See geþencan.

-þéode, see geþéode.

þéoden, m., prince, king: ns. 247, 388, 548, 598, 666; ds. þéodne, 534; as. 662.

þéon, see geþéon.

þéostre, adj., dark: nsm. wk. ðéostræ, 38.

þes, pron., this: nsm. 136, 387, 394; ðes, 87, 96, 100, 303; ðis, 103; nsf. þéos, 213, 262; ðéos, 83; nsn. þis, 38, 254, 387, 465, 537; dsm. þissum, 660; ðissum, 111; þyssum, 131; ðeossum, 108; dsf. þisse, 604; dsn. ðissum, 102; asm. þysne, 157; asf. þás, 608, 644; ðǣs, 504; asn. þis, 180, 253, 419.

þicgan, V (w. an occasional wk. pret., as here), eat: pret. 1p. þigdon (w. gen.), 411.

þider, adv., thither: 217, 302, 531, 589, 632.

þín, poss. pron., thy, thine: nsm. ðín, 63; nsf. 61; gsm. þínes, 685; asm. ðinne, 53; dpf. ðínum, 62.

þing, n., thing: gp. þinga, 273.

þingian, W2., plead, supplicate, sue, intercede: 3s. þingað, 447; pret. 1s. þingade, 509. See geþingian.

þóht, see geþóht.

þolian, see geþolian.

þonne, adv., then: 210, 292, 323, 356, 359, 383, 604, 609, 613, 620, 701, 705, 706, 730; ðonne, 34.

þonne, conj., when: 163, 208, 212, 276, 541, 607; ðonne, 78, 80, 718; than: 176, 213, 390, 597; than when: 151.

þorhdrīfan, I, drive or hurl forth: pret. 3s. þorhdrāf, 163.

þrāg, f., ip. ðrāgum, sometimes, from time to time: 112.

þrēat, m., troop, throng, swarm: ns. ðrēat, 95; ds. þrēate, 388; as. 336; vs. 167; np. þrēatas, 568; ap. þrēatas, 424; oppression, punishment: ns. 325. See heofen-þrēat.

þrēo, num., three: af. 426; an. 503.

þrītig, num., thirty: an. 503.

þrōwian, W2, suffer, endure: pret. 1s. þrōwode, 503; 3s. ðrōwade, 490; inf. 41, 305. See geþrōwian.

þrym, m., glory, magnificence: ns. 662; ðrym, 36; as. 507, 555; vs. 164.

þū, pron., thou: ns. 53, 59, 439, 537, 658, 674, 676, 688, 691, 696, 699, 702, 705(2), 706; ðū, 55, 59, 423, 441, 689, 695, 697, 710; tū, 57, 64; ds. þē, 55, 685; as. þē, 410, 422, 692, 694; ðē, 538, 608; as. þec, 539; ðec, 60; np. gē, 251, 617, 618; gp. ēower, 113; dp. ēow, 493, 509; ap. ēow, 92, 250, 472, 629; dual n. git, 483, 486; d. inc. 488; a. inc. 484.

þurfan, prep., need, have reason to: 1p. ðurfon, 115.

þurh, prep., w. accus., through, by, by virtue of, in, because of, for: 13, 14, 392, 401, 412, 438, 472, 495, 550, 585, 589, 605, 623, 646, 668, 681, 694, 725; ðurh, 6, 53, 59.

þus, adv., thus, so: 534, 569, 657, 733.

þūsend, n., thousand: ns. 302; gp. þūsenda, 402, 421, 723.

þūsendmǣlum, adv. (ip.), in or by thousands: 236, 509, 569, 632.

þyncan, W1., seem, appear: pret. 3s. þūhte, 434, 722; ðūhte, 22, 55. See ofþyncan.

U.

ufan, adv., from above, down, above: 69, 342, 496, 703.

ūhte, f., dawn: as. ūhtan, 406, 465.

unclǣne, adj., unclean, foul, impure: apm. 609.

under, prep., under: w. dat., 135, 319; w. accus., 91; under, 31.

underne, adj., revealed, manifest, clear: nsn. 1.

ungēara, adv., before long, soon: 395.

ungelīc, adj., unlike, different: npm. ungelīce, 150.

unrīm, n., a countless number: as. 573.

unsib, f., enmity, strife, discord: as. unsibbe, 271.

ūp, upp, adv., up, above, upward, on high: ūp, 170, 245, 266, 288, 327, 403, 407, 424, 443, 458, 461, 482, 506, 512, 554, 563, 625, 635, 660, 730; upp, 530.

ūpheofon, m., upper heaven, the heavens: as. 16, 95; vs. ūpheofen, 167.

ūplic, adj., on high, heavenly: asm. ūplicne, 362.

uppe, adv., up, above, on high: 123, 142, 199, 231, 265, 293, 330, 373, 391, 397, 591, 647.

ûre, poss. pron., our: nsm. 548; apm.
392.

ût, adv., out, forth, outside: 5, 34, 161. 163, 520.

ûtan, adv., without, on the outside:
342; w. ymb, about, round: 154.
See ymbûtan.

uton (1p. opt. of witan), interj., w.
infin., let us: 298, 594, 644; uta, 217. 252.

W.

wâ, adv., woe: 342.

wacan, or wæcnan, see on-.

wadan, VI, go, travel: inf. 121.

wælm, m., surging flame: ds. welme, 39; as. 30.

wærgðu, f., indecl., condemnation, punishment: as. 89.

wæstm, m., fruit: np. wæstmas, 214.
See limwæstm.

wæter, n., water: as. 6.

-wald, see ge-, onwald.

walda, see anwalda.

waldend, m., ruler, sovereign, lord:
ns. 218, 564, 585, 587, 608;
wealdend, 125; gs. waldendes, 119, 195, 300, 396; wealdendes, 577; as. 188, 199, 253; np. 24.

✦wâlic, adj., woeful, wretched: nsm.
wk. wâlica, 100.

waran, see hellwaran.

wêa, m., woe, affliction: as. wêan, 42, 185, 336, 715; wêa, 320.

wealdan, red., possess: pret. 1s.
wêold, 275.

weall, m., wall: ap. weallas, 652.
See burhweall.

weallan, red., well, surge, boil: pret.
3s. wêol, 318.

weard, m., guardian, lord: ns. 514;
as. 612, 661; vs. 422.

-weard, see inneweard.

wecnan, see onwecnan.

wel, adv., well: 365.

welm, see brynewelm.

wênan, W1., ween, suppose, imagine, believe; hope or look for, expect: 1s. wêne, 50, 89; 3p.
wênað, 624; pret. 2s. wêndest, 676; wêndes, 59; inf. 115, 451.

weorc, n., work, deed: ns. (? p.) 492; ip. weorcum, 223, 552; wercum, 48. See handge-, hereweorc.

weornian, W2., wither, fail: pret.
3p. weornodon, 468.

weorod, n., host, multitude: as.
werud, 33; gp. weoroda, 188, 198, 564, 581; weroda, 253.

weorpan, see â-, tôweorpan.

weorðan, III, become, be, befall, take place: pret. 3s. wearð, 1, 381, 711; pp. geworden, 282, 429, 452, 465. See for-, geweorðan.

weorðmynt, m., honor, glory: as.
152.

weotod, adj. (pp.), appointed: nsm.
692.

wer, m., man: gp. wera, 492.

✦wêrgu, f., indecl., misery: as. 42.

wêrig, adj., weary, wretched, miserable; evil, malign (? in 126, 332, 630, 669, 711, 732, wêrig, and =
accursed; on the whole question 26.
see Sievers, Indog. Forsch. on 225-35, and Klaeber's note wk.
Beow. 133): nsm. 162, 428; wk. wêrga, wêrega, 126; dsm. wk. wêrga, 711; asm. wk. wêrigan, 332;
wêregan, 669; asf. wk. wêregan, 35; npm. wêrige, 343, 449, 630;
wk. wêrigan, 731.

wesan, anv., be: 1s. eom, 97, 130, 156, 177; eam, 168; 2s. eart, 57,

441, 537, 658; 3s. is, 17, 38, 39,
61, 96, 100, 102, 103, 136, 141,
193, 205, 214, 215, 230, 254, 258,
260A, 288, 333, 355, 365, 387, 396,
427, 441, 479, 556, 583, 584, 593, 596, 649, 662, 663, 665, 692; bið,
79, 182, 264, 304, 363, 606, 626;
1p. syndon, 150; 2p. sind, 617;
3p. synd, 358; seondon, 104, 709;
bēoð, 356, 613, 622; pret. 1s.
wæs, 81; wes, 89; 3s. wæs, 76, 190, 226, 244, 247, 281, 321, 322, 323, 325, 338, 339, 342, 366, 373, 383, 405, 452, 457, 465, 487, 501,
502, 532, 543(2), 547, 558, 565, 574, 669; 1p. wǣron, 236, 391;
3p. wǣron, 330, 385, 434; opt.
2s. sēo, 688; 3s. 213, 265, 704, 707; pret. 1s. wǣre, 124; 2s. wǣre, 56; 3s. wǣre, 63, 518, 722;
3p. wēron, 23; imp. 2s. bēo, 733.
Negative: 3s. nis, 40, 93, 349;
pret. 3s. næs, 491, 517; opt. pret.
3s. nǣre, 676.

wīd, adj., wide, broad, long: nsf.
699; apm. wide, 189.

wīde, adv., widely; far: 258, 320, 333, 386, 684; comp. widor, 120.

wīdeferð, adv., forever: 297.

wīf, n., woman: as. 473.

wiht, f., n., creature, wight: ns. 727;
gp. wihta, 125. See alwihte.

wilcuma, m., welcome guest: npm.
wilcuman, 617.

willa, m., will, command: as. willan, 474. See hyhtwilla.

willan, anv., *will, intend, be willing,
wish, desire; shall, will:* 3s. wile, 289, 304, 392, 397, 609; 2p. willað, 251; pret. 1s. wolde, 173; 3s. wolde, 401, 431, 436, 464, 561; 1p.
woldon, 234, 256; 3p. woldon,

346; opt. 3s. wille, 109, 116, 277, 623; pret. 1s. wolde, 85; 3s. 317,
370, 372. Negative: 3s. nyle, 147; pret. 2s. noldæs, 733.

windan, III, wind, coil: 3p. windað, 136. See bewindan.

windig, adj., windy: nsm. wk. win-diga, 136.

*windsele (? winsele), m., windy hall: as. 320, 386.

-winn, see gewinn.

winnan, III, struggle, strive, fight:
pret. 2s. wunne, 705; pp. gewunnon, 719. See oferwinnan.

winsele, m., wine or banquet hall:
ns. 94.

winter, m., winter, year: gp. wintra, 420, 477, 502.

wirsa, see yfel.

witan, prp., know: 1s. wāt, 181; 2s.
wāst, 705; 3s. wāt, 32; imp. 2s.
wite, 699.

witan, see gewitan.

wīte, n., punishment, torment, torture: gs. wītes, 77, 100, 103, 157, 444, 452; ds. 48; as. 494, 636; np.
witu, 226; gp. wīta, 119; dp.
witum, 80, 731; ap. witu, 185, 336, 392, 715; ip. witum, 162, 343, 428, 449.

witega, m., prophet: np. witegan, 464; witigan, 461; gp. witegena, 492; dp. witegum, 587.

wītehūs, n., house of torment: asn.
628.

*wītescræf, n., cavern or den of torment: as. 691.

wið, prep., w. gen., towards, at:
701, 716; w. dat., over, against, before, against: 249, 433; w.
accus., against, toward: 97, 432, 705.

wiðhabban. W3., withstand: inf. 510.

wilta, see andwlita.

wlitan. I. look, gaze: inf. 409. See geondwlitan.

wlite, m., face, countenance, beauty: ns. 223; ds. 233; as. 152; is. 211.

wlitig. adj., beautiful, fair: nsn. 214; npm. wlitige, 652; apm. wlitige, 609.

wlonc. adj., rich: gp. wloncra, 94.

wolcn. n., cloud: gp. wolcna, 564; dp. wolcnum, 608; ap. wolcn, 6.

wom. m., n., stain, spot, sin: ns. 226; ip. wommum, 157.

swóm, m., wailing, lamentation (? noise): ns. 333.

womcwide, m, evil word or speech, blasphemy: dp. womcwidum, 282.

won, adj., dark, lurid: nsm. wk. wonna, 715.

wong, see neorxnawong.

wóp, m., wailing, weeping: ns. 333.

word, n., word, speech: ns. 162; is. worde, 80, 229; np. 358; dp. wordum, 416, 630; ap. 155, 486; ip. wordum, 48, 65, 126, 223, 386, 409, 514, 661, 731. See byrht-word.

wordcwide, m., words, speech: ap. wordcweðas, 35.

worn, m., magnitude: as. 77.

woruld, f., world, universe, age: gs. worulde, 94; weorulde, 211; ds. worulde, 181, 502; as. worulde, 644; woruld, 59, 224, 608; gp. worulda, 224.

wracu, f., misery, retribution, vengeance: ns. wrece, 711; ds. wrece, 494; as. wrace, 185.

wræclást, m., exile-path or journey: ap. wræclástas, 121; wreclástas, 188, 259.

wráð, adj., angry: nsm. 282, 452.

wráðe, adv., perversely, wickedly: 316.

wrecan, V, utter: 3s. wriceð, 35.

wrec-, see wrac-, wræc-.

writan, see áwritan.

wróht, f., strife: as. wróht, 369.

wuldor, n., glory, heaven: gs. wuldres, 14, 24, 107, 119, 141, 152, 175, 233, 237, 253, 343, 392, 449, 508, 514, 556, 585, 587, 593, 617, 650, 661; wuldre, 42, 85; ds. wuldre, 203, 369, 409; as. wuldor, 59; is. wuldre, 121, 444.

wuldorcyning, m., king of glory: ns. 115, 428; ds. wuldorcyninge, 224, 312; as. 226.

wundian, W2, wound: pp. ge-wundod, 157. See forwundian.

wundor, n., wonder: gp. wundra, 6.

wunian, W2, dwell, live, inhabit, remain: 3s. wunað, 210, 593; 3p. wuniað, 508; pret. 1p. wunodon, 237; inf. 233, 259, 297, 312, 332, 420, 477, 556. See gewunian.

wurðian, W2, honor: pp. ge-wurðad, 537.

wyn, f., delight, pleasure, joy: gs. wynne, 175; ds. wynne, 198; as. 43; dp. wynnum, 237, 508, 555, 593; ip. wynnum, 211, 650.

wynsum, adj., pleasant: nsn. 214; apf. wynsume, 357.

wyrcan, W1., make, build, accomplish, attain: inf. 365, 372, 673. See gewyrcan.

wyrged, see áwyrged.

wyrhta, m., maker, creator: ns. 14, 585.

wyrm, m., serpent: np. wyrmas, 103; gp. wyrma, 336; ap. wyr-mas, 136.

wyrsa, see yfel.

wyrt, f., plant: ap. wyrta, 358.

Y.

yfel, n., evil, misery: gs. yfeles, 374;
    ds. yfele, 733.

yfel, adj., evil, wicked, bad: ap.
    yfle, 610; comp. nsn. wyrse, 125, 175; wirse, 24; wyrsa, 141.

ymb, prep., w. accus., around, round, about: 46, 47, 136, 154, 155, 220, 235, 408, 652, 662; temporal, after: 571; before: 426.

*ymbflēogan, II, fly around: pret.
    3p. ymbflugon, 568.

ymbfōn, red., surround, circle: pp.
    ymbfangen, 144, 518.

*ymbhaldan, red., encompass, embrace: 3s. ymbhaldeð, 7.

ymbhwyrft, m., circuit, extent: as.
    702.

*ymblyt, m., expanse, circuit: as. 7.

ymbūtan, adv., about, around: 264, 352.